Contents

The collection is principally made up of manuscript and typescript letters and postcards from Bishop Christopher Butler to his brother Cuthbert Hilary Butler and to his sister Mary Alice Butler. The correspondence from Bishop Butler to his brother dates from 1929 until the autumn of 1985 (items BBB 1/90, 93 and 101 are the only letters present in this series from Cuthbert H. Butler to Bishop Butler); there is also one letter from Bishop Butler's mother to Cuthbert H. Butler (BBB 1/174). The letters to his sister date from 1946 to 1983; there is also a small number of letters to Mary A. Butler from Dom. Daniel Rees O.S.B. and Arthur L. Wells. A picture postcard of the Second Vatican Council, 1962, and two newspaper cuttings from the 1970s-1980s are also present. The letters are occasionally annotated, either by the correspondents themselves, or latterly by Arthur L. Wells.

Bishop Basil Christopher Butler (1902-1986)

The prominent Catholic theological scholar and ecumenist Basil Edward Butler was born 7 May 1902 at Reading, Berkshire, and took the name Christopher as his name in religion upon his novitiate at Downside Abbey in 1929.

He was the second of four sons and the third of six children of William Edward Butler and his wife Bertha Alice Bowman. He was educated at Reading School, and then St John's College, Oxford, ultimately holding a tutorship at Keble College as a clerical don in 1925. (He was made an honorary fellow of St John's in 1966.) He went on to teach classics at Brighton College (1927-1928), and then at Downside School, Somerset (1928-1929).

During these latter years Butler's faith increasingly moved toward Catholicism, in which Church he became a communicant in 1928. Entering the Benedictine community at Downside the following year, he was ordained on 10 June 1933. Butler remained at Downside for many years, serving as headmaster of the school from January 1940 until his election as abbot on 12 September 1946, an office he held until 1966. He was president of the English Benedictine congregation from August 1961-1966, and in this pre-eminent role his was an influential voice at each of the four sessions of the Second Vatican Council (1962-1965). At this Council he was a member of its commission for doctrine, and also participated in the debate on war and peace, with particular reference to nuclear deterrence.

In 1966 he was appointed auxiliary bishop to Cardinal J. C. Heenan, being consecrated bishop of Nova Barbara in Westminster Cathedral on 21 December 1966. As auxiliary he became the first area bishop of Hertfordshire, last resident president of St Edmund's College, Ware, and vicar capitular of the archdiocese in the sede vacante between Cardinals Heenan and Hume. Latterly he served on the Anglican/Roman Catholic International Commission (ARCIC), and was co-chairman of the English Anglican-Roman Catholic Committee (1970-1981). From 1972 he was a member of the editorial board of the New English Bible.

In February 1980 he was appointed an assistant to the pontifical throne by Pope John Paul II.

Butler's writings and thoughts were widely published and broadcast from the 1950s onwards. He died in London on 20 September 1986.

Venerable Cuthbert H. Butler (1913-2007)

Cuthbert H. Butler, later preferring his second name Hilary, was born on 8 March 1913. He followed his brother to Reading School, and then studied History and Theology at St John's College, Cambridge, where he held the Naden Studentship in Divinity, the Burney Studentship and a Gladstone Studentship. He spent some time studying in Germany in 1938-1939, before his ordination as deacon at Chichester in 1940. He entered the priesthood a year later. He was curate of [St Matthias], Preston, Brighton, 1940-1942; chaplain of the R.A.F.V.R., 1942-1946, serving in England, Normandy, Holland and Germany; curate-in-charge of St Matthias, Preston, 1946-1947; vicar of St Matthias, Preston, 1947-1951; rector of Crawley with West Crawley, 1951-1958; rector of Oliver, British Columbia, Canada, 1958-1961; lecturer and canon of Christ Church Cathedra, Victoria, British Columbia, 1961-1977; examiner chaplain to the archbishop of British Columbia, 1966-1968; archdeacon of Columbia, 1977-1979; and archdeacon (emeritus), from 1979. Butler also maintained a long association with the University of Victoria, serving as its chaplain and later on its senate for many years, as well as being a John Albert Hall lecturer. He married Josephine Mary Stubbs in 1942; they had six children. C. Hilary Butler and his wife returned to England from Canada in 1984, settling in the West Country. Josephine Butler died in 1995. C. Hilary Butler died on 18 December 2007. Both are buried at Winsford, Somerset.

Mary Alice Butler (1907-2009)

Mary Alice Butler was born at Reading, Berkshire, 14 June 1907. Her professional career was spent as a teacher. She died at St Mary's Home, Oxford, on 15 May 2009.

The Butler family

William Edward Butler and his wife Bertha Alice Bowman had six children: four sons, Bernard (1897-1981), Basil (1902-1986), Felix (1905-1997) and Cuthbert (1913-2007); and two daughters, Margaret (1899-1986), and Mary (1907-2009). William Butler was a partner in Butler & Sons, a wine-merchant business (founded 1830) in Chatham Street, Reading; he was, with his brother, the fourth generation of Butlers to run the business. His sons Bernard and Felix also became partners in the firm, which was sold to Fuller, Smith & Turner in 1976, with the premises to be operated as a public house named The Butler.

Accession details

Donated by Jeremy Butler (Misc.2009/10:67) and the estate of Mary A. Butler (Misc.2009/10:83).

Previous custodial history

The letters in the main represent Bishop Butler's side of the correspondence over many years, being collected and provisionally arranged by Bishop Butler's then literary executor, the Very Reverend Dom. Daniel Rees O.S.B., the librarian of Downside Abbey, and by Arthur L. Wells. Bishop Butler's literary executor is now the Right Reverend Dom. Aidan Bellenger O.S.B., abbot of Downside.
Arrangement

The papers are arranged in three series:

1. Correspondence of Basil Christopher Butler and Cuthbert H. Butler, otherwise Hilary Butler, (includes one letter from their mother, Bertha Alice Butler to CHB);
2. Letters to Mary A. Butler, chiefly from Basil Christopher Butler, but including some letters from Dom. Daniel Rees O.S.B. and Arthur L. Wells;
3. Newspaper cuttings.

A number of letters are undated, or incompletely dated: such items, judging from their contents, are placed either in the main sequence or letters (if the exact date can be inferred with confidence), or at the end of the year in which it was written, or at the end of the relevant decade.

Conditions of access

Open for consultation, excepting three items, access to which is limited by the UK Data Protection Act 1998.

Copyright and copying

Permission to make any published use of material from the collection must be sought in advance from the Sub-Librarian, Special Collections (e-mail PG.Library@durham.ac.uk) and, where appropriate, from the copyright owner. The Library will assist where possible with identifying copyright owners, but responsibility for ensuring copyright clearance rests with the user of the material.

Form of citation

The form of citation should use the code GB-0033-BBB, or the collection name Bishop Basil Butler Papers, followed by the reference number.

To order items in the search room, use the collection reference code(s), derived by removing the repository code (GB-0033-), followed by the reference number. Citing the section of the finding aid is useful.

Bibliography

By the kind permission of its author, Sr Anne T. Flood, S.C., a bibliography, compiled in 1981, of works by Bishop Butler, and of a selection of reviews of some of these works is available http://palimpsest.dur.ac.uk/pictures/Butler_Bibliography.pdf. In addition to this, the following works have been published about Bishop Butler.

Abbot Butler and the Council: a special commemorative issue celebrating the centenary of the birth of Basil Christopher Butler, Abbot and Bishop, and fortieth anniversary of the opening of the second Vatican Council: papers given at a symposium at Heythrop College, Kensington, London, on 12 October 2002, (Bath: Downside Abbey, 2003).

BBB 1/1  Tuesday 19 November [1929]

BB at Downside Abbey, Stratton-on-the-Fosse, Somerset, to CHB [at Reading School, Reading, Berkshire]

Welcomes news of [Reading] School, CHB and his negotiation and progress with religious issues. Defines two requisites for fruitful enquiry into religion: “conscience, the deliberate conviction that we are not dealing with mere mathematical or academic truth, but are dutifully trying to find the course in life which we are <morally> bound to pursue” ; and “the realization that religion is the most important thing in life”. Encourages CHB to pray for himself and a friend, [?Norman] Gash (NG), noting the certainty of God “answering all good prayers made with faith”. While acknowledging the contemporary existence of non-Christian great thinkers, critiques the over-estimation of the work of H. G. Wells who, when more objectively compared to “Plato, St Paul, Plotinus, St Thomas Aquinas, Darwin, Newman & Einstein ... appears as a populariser of <rather> crude scientific ideas and an amateur (a mere amateur, I assure you) in philosophy & theology”. Engages by proxy in a theological argument with CHB’s friend NG, wishing first to establish an understanding of the intellectual status quo: “[i]f you can conceive the solar system without the sun, you have a picture of the Universe without God”. Answers the suggestion that evolution disproves Christianity, stating, “you can't produce from anything (except a conjuror's hat) what was not in it to be produced. Therefore you cannot produce conscious life from inanimate matter”. Ridicules the concept that the “most primitive forms of inanimate matter held within themselves the highest achievements of Plato, Shakespeare and the Saints”, and the failure [of the theory of evolution] to explain the origin of such “marvellous qualities”. Against close textual criticism of the synoptic gospels without the requisite scholarship, he counsels reading the texts as a whole, and summarises the main points of an argument for their authenticity, concluding with a statement of the centrality of the doctrine of the divinity of Christ: as such, [Christianity] “has best fused morals & religion, and it has best fused religion and philosophy; it has shown itself capable of satisfying men's intellect, conscience & emotions at their highest, and <also> of giving support to the unlearned simple etc.”

BBB 1/2  Sunday 24 November [1929]

BB to CHB

Conveys his best wishes, as a former White Scholar himself, to NG for his examinations [for a Thomas White scholarship to St John's College, Oxford]. Revisits his recommended reading list, qualifies his assent to the work of Church of England writers, withdraws Beibitz as perhaps inappropriate, and favours Edwards and Chesterton. Compares NG's reported position with that described in H. G. Wells' God the invisible king, and directs CHB to a relevant critique in Henry Scott Holland's Creeds and Critics and works by John Neville Figgis, "both C. of E.!". Felicitates CHB on his friendship with NG, while emphasising the serious responsibilities of such an apostolic and influential role, and recommending he sustain throughout an absolute fidelity to religious practice. Counsels above all against disputatiousness between them - temporarily set aside rather than deny what can not yet be proved, and be encouraged by the certainty proffered by surrender to the will of God. Insists on the indivisibility of faith and doctrine, describing the moment of personal acknowledgement of the moral obligation of belief in a religion as requiring the acceptance, if not immediate complete understanding, of that religion's doctrines, and aligning this certainty with the concreteness of the incarnation: "we are invited not to a vague aspiration towards a possible Infinite, but to concrete union with a real Infinite bought down into time and space". Discusses, in relation to the reported opinions of NG, the problem of evil, monotheism, the unity and trinity of God, the necessity of deriving Creation from a moral rather than non-moral and independent cause: "the purer and stronger religion becomes the more insistant it is on the absolute goodness and justice and the irresistible power of God". "As a soul develops and becomes deep and sincere and humble, it can find no ultimate satisfaction in wealth, or honour, or worldly success, or learning, or art, or human affection - in any of these or all - unless behind and above them all it can realize its own highest possibilities in the worship love and service of a unique and infinitely good & powerful God." Rehearses the doctrine of the Fall for CHB's use with NG.

BBB 1/3  8 and 10 December 1929

BB to CHB

CHB's priestly vocation. Islam, monotheism and truth. Programme of apostolic preaching and authority outlined. Faith preceding doctrinal conviction: doctrinal detail "a consequence" of accepting the Christian mission, and vigorous insistence on such points "one of the great arguments for the truth of Christianity". "Religious truth is not merely what is true, but also comes to one with an obligation to accept and act on it: i.e. it is intimately concerned not only with the intellect but with the will." Discourses freely on the devil - a creature of God and so "essentially good" - and human degradation of the natural world, complementing the resurrection with a "renovation" of the natural world; and, citing Einstein, positing a "new time" as well as a "new world". BB's vocation; and monasticism: the imitative path of a Christian need not mirror the life of Christ in all external aspects; and "each faithful member of the Church constitutes something to His fullness", Christ having been "the germ of the true human life". The influence of intellectual work not to be underestimated, even on the unintellectual. Relaxed monastic life. Wales Relief Fund. Conversion of NG. Lightening damage to Downside Abbey church tower.

NG informed of the correspondence, and his consent obtained. The incarnation. Quakerism, and ceremonial religion. Argues against the “'philosophy of the pure spirit'”: experience of the physical world and religiously expressed emotions complete worship. Child-like faith counters risk of that which is merely “'high-brow'”. Directs CHB to his studies.

BB to CHB
CHB to apply for scholarships. Neither BB's reputation nor Sugar's [? see BB/1/136] support to be relied upon. Deprecates sortes Biblicae. Reviews an essay on Napoleon by NG. The role of tradition in the Church, a link to the Incarnation. Corporate nature of Christianity. Recommends Thomas à Kempis' The imitation of Christ; G. K. Chesterton's Orthodoxy and The everlasting man. Against an individualistic attitudinal origin for faith, detected in CHB's correspondence, BB argues for a more objective view grounded in the community: notes the intrinsically social nature of all religious groups in all cultures, and membership of the Church - the Body of Christ - as “the divine answer to this human craving for fellowship in religion”; and counsels “the way to have a deeply personal religion is not to cut away from the religious group, but to enter right into the group-religion ... a member or unit is most itself when it most completely coheres with the body in its functioning”.

Contrasts sortes Biblicae with saints “chancing” upon personally significant texts. Counsels CHB to continue to widen his horizons and cultivate an intimacy with God: “big ... difficult” books recommended, and lives of saints, The imitation of Christ etc., and prayer.

BBB 1/8  Sunday 31 August [?1930]
BB to CHB
CHB’s visit to Caldey Abbey, Pembrokeshire, and Cistercian monasticism. Reacts to a negative report of NG’s visit to Germany: “terribly pagan” character of non-Catholic German intelligentsia, “influenced in some of its strata by Bolshevism - which is much closer to them than to you and me”. The “jungle growth of chaotic fertile variegated knowledge” distracts young intelligent persons from moral and religious truths. The voice of conscience: modern intellectual world loth to consent to its power; and inhibited from doing so by outmoded intellectualism of organised religion - promotes divergence and opposition. Modern thinkers “need the ethico-religious ballast, support, and grace of Christianity”. Short reasoned attack on “irreligious [intellectual] culture”, which is “doomed to corruption and disintegration”: “in practice man can not keep his moral grasp on [the] supreme value without the help of religion”. Recommends to CHB the sermons preached by John Henry Newman before the University of Oxford [ Fifteen sermons preached before the University of Oxford between A.D. 1826 and 1843], containing ... some most fruitful and helpful ideas tending towards a 'philosophy of religion'', and to persevere with attentive reading of the New Testament and the spiritual classics. Suggests CHB make NG a gift of Solovyov's The justification of the good, but which BB has not yet himself read: exemplifies Solovyov's life amidst then prevailing anti-religious intellectual currents in Russian culture.

BB to CHB
Subject to the permission of the novice master, promises to read CHB's paper on Benedictinism. Distinguishes the Cistercians from the Cassinese of Subiaco: influence of St John Cassian on St Benedict. Counters inferred critique by CHB of monastic obedience, and the fallibility of the Holy Church: supplements doctrinal infallibility with, outside this area, “the sort of unquestioning submission with which a young child 'takes its mother's word for it'”; a qualified expert may differ, privately; no obedientiary may obey a sinful command; “a matter of practical loyalty etc.”; monastic obedience akin to military discipline. The English [Benedictine] Congregation “more like a federation of states than a simple state", and this might, BB hopes, admit both Cistercian “die-hards” and the “plastic adaptible [sic] 'moderate' (if sometimes unhappily rather lax)” English [Benedictine] Congregation.

Responds to CHB's paper on [history of] Benedictinism: preference for “mental prayer” to the general term meditation; the purpose of monasticism, and mortification; love of fellow brethren; humility; unnecessary extra-mural field-work discouraged; non-priority of education of boys not intended for the monastery; suggested class origins of St Benedict's community. Monasticism an end in itself, contingent social benefits merely incidental.

BBB 1/11  Feast of Christ the King, [23 November] 1930
BB to CHB

Proposes two counsellors at Oxford for NG, if he is in earnest: Father Martin Cyril D'Arcy S.J., “possibly the most brilliant of the younger religious intellectual forces in Oxford today”; and his “great friend” Dr Kenneth Escott Kirk, “a bit of a philosopher ... and a very able and 'sympathetic' man.” Also proposes a Dr James of St Thomas's. Responds to CHB’s raising the question of the competing claims to priority made by other religions: defines religion, and, comparatively, religions essentially as claiming a revelation of the truth; the true (Roman Catholic) religion admits no compromise; recruits Voltaire's dictum “écrasez l'infâme” [crush the infamous] against the “abominable deception of the human spirit” that is false religion; religious claims to veracity climax with Christianity, “where it is explicit, logical, insistent and exclusive”, complete and final; prior claims at best “preparatory, or divinatory, 'validities'”; Christian incarnationalism sealed by the miracle of the resurrection; in the final analysis, Christians absolved from further searching for the true religion by recourse to God-given reason - “it is more reasonable to be a Christian than not”. Such arguments transcend culture and race; specific historicity of Christian revelation and religion designed to prevail in the differentiating cultural/racial milieu of its creation; Christianity appeals not necessarily to man as he is “in his average outlook” but to “what he has it in him to become".

BBB 1/12  Sunday [?1930, probably before 31 August]
BB to CHB

[Date uncertain.] On Newman: “he exercised an unusual fascination on Oxford ... His English style, too, is one of the glories of English literature”. Concerning CHB’s connection with NG, BB provides a consideration of its benefits to CHB, with an appreciation of CHB’s intellectual system. Citing J.S. Mill, offers a critique of NG’s position, both in its unsustainable remedies and its analysis that the existing “great politico-intellectual ethico-religious and social complex which is full Christianity” requires replacement. Emphasises the adaptability and assimilative power of Christianity as the best of humanity: “[t]he element of criticism never has the right of ousting the element of positive certainty in human history (at least at this stage, where human history has realized itself in superhuman Revelation & grace), but should be a purgative element within the positive system.” Positive conviction judged to be a pre-requisite for human happiness, which conviction has never been found outside revealed religion, certainly not in intellectualism alone. “There is no hope of religious progress except in Christianity, and in Christianity the essential point (thank God) has already been attained; for something (God) has come from superhuman regions into human history to impart the element of permanence without which not growth, but only flux, is possible.” Convictions rooted in tradition alone “tend toward fanaticism (which is the substitution of practical & emotional violence for intellectual certainty) or to the dreariest, (anti-rational one might almost say: Plato has a nice word that means haters of reason) agnosticism or scepticism, not to say apathy and indifference.” Urges NG “to carry [his] enthusiasm up and out into the love of God.” Recommends Progress and religion by Christopher Dawson, with summary, and Arnold’s Culture and anarchy. Engages CHB to lead NG to a realisation that a programme of secular intellectual progress alone is incommensurate with human nature and experience, and that “the desire to create good conditions on earth is by itself futile, but is a valuable ideal within the wider desire for the kingdom of God & His righteousness”. CHB is to purchase [Vladimir] Solovyov [?The justification of the good].

BBB 1/13  16 November [?1930]
BB to CHB

Consoles CHB re his current failure to convert NG, and counsels CHB’s duty is only “to do what He shows us here and now to be right”, not to give up hope, and to pray; quotes Thompson's The hound of heaven. Continues a discussion of the “moral divergence” problem re the conversion of non-European unbelievers, the slow growth of moral appreciation and consequent slow process of conversion. Nevertheless, Christianity has an appeal to Asian and African unbelievers, “attracted by the moral personality of Christ”, and contrasts these with Europeans, plenty of whom “will say that Christian ethics are unpractical”. Beside such arguments, a more objective intellectual proof - “[t]hat clinching argument" - is found in miracles, “objective fact[s] irrespective of moral tastes”.

BBB 1/14  3 January 1931
BB to CHB
Wishes CHB luck at Oxford [?entrance examination]. Agrees with CHB's point about the impossibility of real union between “two ordinary human beings”: another human being can not offer complete satisfaction; St Augustine's restless heart; A.E. Housman's poetry “superbly artistic rather petulant” sourness indicative of a loss of faith or hope in union with absolute good. God the ultimate answer and supreme source of all reality. Against “faint and hesitating relations”: “abandon yourself utterly to Him ... and then in Him love your fellow creatures with a supernatural charity which He bestows ... above all in the sense that you are devoted to the cause of their salvation and their deeper union with God”. The way of the cross or Thomas à Kempis' regalis via [regia via]: “I don't think one could conceive a more magnificent 'philosophy' in the actual condition of our human life on earth than this Christian one that seems to accept, approve, deepen, establish the philosophy of despair - only to make it an essentially transitory prelude to a song of triumph”. Commends the all-out, lived, willed profession of Christianity, and with that '... all excellence, and all that is praiseworthy' [Philippians 4: 8].

BBB 1/15  Mother's birthday [24 February] [?1931]
BB to CHB
[Date uncertain.] Thanks CHB for his criticisms of an unidentified published review; avows “respect and appreciation” for the scholarship of Anglican theologians. Provides an essentially Thomist philosophical analysis of evil, alongside recommending a practical programme of reading the Gospels and prayer: denies existence of any thing “substantially evil”; “God did not create evil, in the strict philosophical sense ...”; “[e]vil is the absence of a good which ought to be present”;
the necessity of defects or failures - allowed but not directly willed or caused by God in “a manifoldly graded totality of more or less perfect creatures” so that such creatures “would conspire to reflect the inimitable unity of divine perfection”, and which failures are “the cost of the success of the whole universal work”; beside Julian of Norwich's All shall be well ... insists in the “abiding consequences” of evil; a [Manichaean] dualistic doctrine “morally and religiously abhorrent [and] intellectually absurd”.

BBB 1/16  Thursday 5 March 1931
BB to CHB
Birthday wishes. Invites CHB's reflections upon BB's previous remarks on evil. Discusses the application of philosophy to the investigation of Christian origins, to precede (and preclude) a scientific investigation of the facts. The latter approach often partially adopts philosophical positions, e.g. against miracles, and is an unsuitable first method to investigate Christianity. The historical evidence in the Bible for Christian tenets is of a limited quality, but such that matches that of evidence typically employed to support modern scientifically investigated 'facts', and all of which evidence must tolerate an irreducible uncertainty answered ultimately only by an appeal to common sense. “And an honest thinker, who believes he thinks miracles impossible, will prefer to look a fool than to assert what to him seems an impossibility.” A Catholic’s certainty, nevertheless, is less dependant upon such fallible investigations than upon “philosophic' systematization”. Reading Life of Saint Francis of Assisi, by Father Cuthbert, O.S.F.C.

BBB 1/17  Low Sunday [12 April 1931]
BB to CHB
[Date uncertain.] BB clarifies an earlier statement defining evil as without “substantial existence”, offering instead “positive existence”. Affirms God created all substantial matter (inherently good), all that exists, and also affirms the contingency of qualities of matter: however, “[e]vil is not a substance, and is not to be defined as a mere quality, even, without further qualification. Rather, it is a lack of a quality which ought to be present ... Evil doesn't then exist, yet evil is”. Against the accusation of indifference to suffering: “[i]t is no true kindness to sufferers to surrender <through sentimentalism> the austere purity of the Truth that liberates”. Re the relation of Christianity to modern thought and future civilization, recommends Christopher Dawson's Christianity and the new age. Steers CHB from a desire for a more spiritual environment toward a (joint) reading and writing programme: Letters to a niece by Friedrich von Hügel, to whom BB acknowledges a great debt; the unitary content of the original Gospel-teaching, which interests BB at present; Plato; English literature - “the great Victorians” - namely Arnold's Culture and anarchy, possibly Ruskin (BB professing his unfamiliarity), Newman, Carlyle, Shorthouse's John Inglesant, William Morris, [Robert] Browning.

BB to CHB
Congratulates and commiserates CHB on being appointed Captain of the House. Defends a printed sonnet by BB against criticism that it does not conform to the traditional scheme/form. Discussion of Plato, “one of the unaging good things”, and recommends the Apology and Crito. Suggests also Lowes-Dickinson's dialogue on The meaning of good. Analysis of “the romantic feeling”: affirms the incomparable nature of the All-good and the “will-union” realisable through direct intentional love of God and prayer, while nevertheless, “we come into <full> relation with the All-good precisely by doing our duty by the things that are good”. With some confessional sympathy, reassures CHB that his “two romanticisms are capable of synthesis”: “[t]o want to love the love-worthy - that is what matters”.

BBB 1/19  Sunday 30 August [1931]
BB to CHB
Looks forward to time at home when BB and CHB might “really get down to things in conversation”. Answers CHB re concern for and personal relevance of the suffering of others. Cites contemporary social deprivation, godlessness, divorce, the experience of a year working in Brighton, World War I, Russia, the economic and political crisis, the East “passing from the frying pan of pure paganism to the fire of a pagan reaction from Christianity”: “I tend to believe in the coming 'Downfall of the West' [Spengler]. There is a breath of October in the air of Europe, and the leaves are whirling down our macadammed roads.” Either way, modern culture is condemned. Counsels CHB that sober objectivity and greater “emotional and practical detachment” is required to answer its appeals. Quotes William Johnson Cory’s poem ‘Mimnermus in church’. The universal hunger for worldly love, a gift, when given, from God that ultimately leads to and may be fully satisfied only by God: in this sense, God is not an abnegation of humanity from which to shrink, but a “plenissimum”. The “care of reality”, or concern for all humanity, is such an invocatory love. [Downside] School is “one real opportunity for [love’s] exercise in the potentialities of whatever person or community comes within its range”. Human suffering best understood as a corporate rather than individual condition, to which only a divinely incorporated humanity might answer - “we need the City of God over against the City of Babylon, not in mere opposition to it, but to redeem it”. The Catholic Church a rock of truth in a sea of uncertainty: “[t]here is something wrong with a man's conscience if he can't believe in orthodox doctrine ... the kind of acceptance God wants of him is that of a child learning by heart truths which it can't yet comprehend”. Quotes Father Martin Cyril D'Arcy S.J. BB counsels CHB in perseverance, sympathy for others and an openness to the opportunities these will engender. Subscription of suggestions for papers for 'Seekers' [?confirmation class].

BBB 1/20  27 September 1931
BB to CHB
Discussion of sexuality, the unique chosen individual and a personal God: personal trials another means of surrendering to and converging with the will, the love of God, in one's life and actions. "Porro unum necessarium" [only one thing is necessary], (Luke 10:42). “There is a sense in which we are kindly seeking God when we seek our fellow creatures. But when God is 'found by them who sought Him not' [Isaiah 65:1], then in Him we find all that is worth having in others too.” Recommends reading poetry, in particular Ralph Waldo Emerson Give all to love, Robert Browning Abt Vogler and Life in a love, Francis Thompson The hound of heaven. Identifies poetry's truth as springing from a soil of sound philosophy, as “the Church's liturgical worship blossom[s] on the stem of dogmatic truth”. BB’s Spenglerism neither a faith nor a pessimism, a tentative suspicion only. Against CHB’s observation of the narrowing influence of BB's [new] faith: BB’s attitude less a reaction against the past, than a consequence of Catholicism's essentially liberating and expanding influence; “[it] has put me into possession of myself intellectually”. Disclaims the gift of prophecy and recommends Mark 13 in one sitting. The counselled emotional detachment likened to self-psychoanalysis: to choose self-adaptation to the love of God rather than adaption of the world to one's needs. Against apathy and scepticism quotes Walter de la Mare Awake!. Responds to CHB's report of his classical studies.

Encloses notes from [James T.S. Barnes'] Fascism (Home University Library), with comments by BB. “The writer ... is a Roman Catholic, and gives an amusingly idyllic picture of Fascist ideas. ... Fascism seems to me to have a far more satisfactory case than Communism - it is less restricted to the merely economic outlook and has a more tolerable philosophy; but in practice it is another matter - and even in theory the neo-idealist Fascists are bad; they leave no real place for revealed religion, and I for one am convinced that no stable society can [sic] be built on foundations which are not consistent with Catholicism". BBB 1/27  Tuesday [?1931]
BB to CHB
[Date uncertain.] Replies to CHB’s question on evil: finitude appears to contradict the concept of an Infinite, but both must be sustained, such that freedom seems to deny divine omnipotence; moral evil the worst evil, but incumbent with man’s freedom of action to choose God as the supreme good; evil permitted (but not done) for the elicitation of good, as the Fall is answered by the redemption by Christ. Offers to aid CHB’s “reflective considerations” in any programme of his to strengthen his present grounds for belief, and emphasises that decisions on belief and un-belief require rational grounds.

Places CHB’s statement that God is “supremely personal” against the limitation of the concept of human personality: “God is supremely intelligible but quite inconceivable”. Cites Dame Julian of Norwich. BB has completed reading the Life of Saint Francis of Assisi, [by Father Cuthbert, O.S.F.C.]: counsels CHB rather than desire to have been his contemporary to accept this present time as “the one moment, in all the ages past present & to come, for you and your union in Christ with God”.

Comments upon a philosophical article by CHB, [perhaps upon great persons in history]: epistemological criteria; Christ's “absoluteness in the human plane” against man's potential and realised nature; argues against solipsism. Encourages CHB to develop a habit of study and prayer in his final months at [Reading] school and preparations for Cambridge ‘Littlego’ [Previous examination], with a regime proposed: “... if you make every fragment of your life an act of love to Him, your prayer and your activity interlock to form one sacrifice of love and praise”. Recommending perseverance, quotes and critiques part of Life in a love by Robert Browning. God “is yet never 'removed': and not to rest in failure, here, is to succeed”. Proposes joint reading programme of Shakespeare, A.C. Bradley's Shakespearean tragedy. Critiques CHB's grammar.

Comments on Friedrich von Hügel. Admits the spiritual utility of philosophy, poetry and the love of our fellow-men, as “we cannot live without relaxation on the heights of an actual pre-occupation with God”, but at the same time “we should be foolish to try to satisfy ourselves finally with anything short of [God]”. Describes a detailed, daily process and practice of “mental prayer”, summarised as “[q]uite simple, you see: humility, faith, hope, love”. “Prayer is your love-offering to your heavenly Father - to the divine lover of your soul. He is unspeakably pleased by our efforts, poor though they seem in our eyes.”

Deprecates an incident connected with the Long Run at Reading School. Discussion of Othello, and responding to CHB's critique of selfishness: “[i]t is desirable to be unselfish; to know that one is, is less important. ... I should reject without hesitation the idea that men always love selfishly”. Review of James Hopwood Jeans' The mysterious universe: BB queries if neither “Mind” - “a stage nearer God than Matter” - nor, by extension, an infinite God are comprised within Jeans' finite universe. Short discussion of evil, defined as “shallow and local and short-sighted”. Requests longer loan of Jeans' book, finding its meaning still obscure. Discussion of time: BB's confidence “that every body has its own time and time-direction ... [and] if there are undulations or any sort of movements, there must be some thing or things, whether material in the old-fashioned sense or not, to be the subject to which these motions are attributed. The motion of nothing seems to me to be no motion.” Presents a Thomist view of Jeans' “pre-established harmony between mathematics and the external world”. Suggests CHB read BB's (now dated) critique of mechanistic materialism. Restates the eternal aspect of God, the divine “Now” contrasted with the human sense of the term. BB currently inspired by the religious writings of an unidentified Frenchwoman (d. circa 1918). CHB to spend a week at Bournemouth. Postscript: CHB advised against a course of Pelmanism. BB bows to CHB's reluctance to read [A.C.] Bradley [Shakespearean Tragedy].

C.] Bradley; BB busy, but will try to keep pace. Responds re intellect damping emotion: what passion is not wasted on superficial goals is channelled towards the worthwhile. “Amor intellectualis Dei is only less flashy than lesser loves because it has fused the colours of their rainbow into the piercing whiteness of a pure flame.” BB denies he is bored by [James Hopwood] Jeans, pleading lack of time.

[Date uncertain.] Discussion and definition of functional aspects of being. Comment on BB’s respect for scholasticism (Thomism) against Oxford university’s former aversion to it, and predicting a synthesis of Kantian philosophy within Thomism: “[it] seems ultimately to be the best claimant to the position of backbone of human philosophy”. BB addresses CHB’s points on moral evil and the existence of God, using explicitly Thomist arguments. Refines CHB’s use of the term selfishness. BB comments on locations of Ripon Hall and Pusey House, relative to Oxford, and cautions CHB on the attractions of intellectual life: “one must distinguish between an atmosphere of healthy enquiry and an atmosphere which encourages what is technically doubt”. In the context of CHB’s decision for the next year, “keep a grip on the main thing, that religion and all our life are for the triumph of the reign of God in our souls and those of others - for the indwelling of the Holy Trinity so that we live a divine life. I live no longer I, but Christ lives in me [Galatians 2:20]. Nothing else matters; nothing”. Requests CHB read BB's unpublished and unfinished “book”. [Date uncertain.] Wishes CHB luck for his trip. Accepts CHB's functional description of matter, tracing antecedents in Aristotle, St Thomas and perhaps Plato. Addresses pantheism and CHB's critique, citing the existence and activity of that which is not God, giving as an example morally evil activity. Recommends Thomas Aquinas' Summa theologica, part I, translated into French and edited by Fr Antonin-Gilbert Sertillanges. Refines, following Thomist criteria, his definition of the functional aspect of being: “essence is expressed or perhaps represented in function - or perhaps that function corresponds to essence”. Distinguishes such “function[ing] for one's specific purpose” from selfishness: “his [fallen man's] function w'd be realised just in the preference of God to self. The fact that love gratifies desire may enable us to love, but need it therefore be the predominant motive of our love?” CHB has met Fr Mark [?Pontifex] and Br Julian. Postscript: advises CHB against Ripon Hall, deprecating its “abominable” liberalism.

Responds to CHB's anxiety regarding BB's approaching solemn profession, and future life in the monastery: “I should like you to think of my solemn profession as you would of a proposed marriage between one of the family and someone else”. A holiday at home is likely this year. Against 'God' as an abstract noun, posits God as “the most positive of all realities”; an unlimitable finitude. Comment upon CHB's realistic appreciation of the merits of Reading School leads to a gloss on 'Oderit vitia, diligat fratres' (“Let him hate the vices, but love the persons of the brethren”), from the Rule of St Benedict. Anticipates CHB finding “heart-piercing beauty; and friendship; and truth” at university, but, “less ... according to your demands, than in God's way, and at His time”. Warns of the superficialities of the pleasantries of life, and that below this “[life] is - nearly always perhaps <for us men> - bitter”; but, directs CHB to the core of reality, where the individual may access, through faith, “an anticipatory joy possible here in the certainty that the source of that final joy is already attainable by faith”.

[Date uncertain.] Acknowledges receipt of book [?Berdyaev]. CHB has been given Felix [Butler]'s old rooms [at St John's College, Cambridge]. BB leaves preliminary arrangements of the Reading School scholarship prize to CHB and Felix. Offers his thanks for CHB's congratulations [?on BB's solemn profession]: on the "monastic ideal", "once it is conceded that there is one object supremely worthy of attainment, it seems reasonable, for others' sake and for one's own, to concentrate on the attaining of it". Criticism of Marxism's elevation of the "necessary but unimportant economic aspect of life" over "culture and religion and the human values generally"; refers to Berdyaev's contentions approvingly, and recommends his Un nouveau moyen âge. BB qualifies how far within his "scheme" he wishes to argue the historicity of the New Testament. Provides summary list of objections to various Christian and Roman Catholic beliefs and doctrines, and citing W. H. Turton's The truth of Christianity as an apologetic text used in Downside School. Recommends Friedrich von Hügel's Essays and addresses on the philosophy of religion, but warning it may be too demanding: "he was a man who knew the intellectual side of things well, and knew the claims of the intellect and intellectual sincerity, and yet was a convinced believer". Also recommends, though with more reservations, Essays Catholic and critical (S.P.C.K.). Argues, firstly a doubting Christian's duty to remain faithful to its teachings up until the moment of renunciation of that faith; and secondly, against the necessities of actions and choices in life, and the various other transient theories of reality that these have involved, Christianity is "the only one that can ultimately hold its ground in face of reason and its rivals .... where revelationism reaches what would seem to be its deepest form for men, since here revelation is expressed in a human life, and the inner Being of the revealing is identical with the Being of the Revealed". Cites also miracles and "the moral miracle of the actual history of true Christianity" as proofs.

BB to CHB
[Date uncertain.] Comments upon Friedrich von Hügel's writing and BB's first acquaintance with it aged 22, then finding it "stiff". BB's respect for CHB's intellectual honesty and acuteness, against CHB's perceived lack of confidence: cites Bosquaneat's requirement for sincerity in philosophy. Defines a "healthy and right" scepticism: argues no individual intellect, however powerful, is sufficient to discover truth without divine aid; considers agnosticism. Responds to CHB's friend's creed and its simplicity, querying its authorities. Characterises Christianity in history as "a central stream, or rather an organic society, whose creed has been dogmatic and exclusive - anything but broad-church"; cites anathemas and prohibitions in Galatians 1 and Romans 14, and argues New Testament revelation is announced through authorities rather than via private judgement. John Henry Newman's fourth Oxford University sermon recommended: "he is one of my men and he thought this book - I believe - contained some of his best stuff". Comforts CHB "that it was through an arctic winter of obscurity that I was carried by God to the faith of the Church, there finding that certainty that is above human opinion and that can therefore rescue us from the abyss of black uncertainty into which, when we rely merely on self, there is always the fear of falling".

BBB 1/45  13 November 1932
BB to CHB
Coaches CHB to persevere with his mental prayer, despite its “apparent futility”, admitting to having experienced similar difficulties and uncertainties: “He does not demand impossibilities”. Identifies in the intellectual honesty that compels CHB to explore metaphysics the manifestation of a “law so acutely proportioned to the human personality that it is latent in every human situation ... infinite in its potentialities, absolute in its demands”; and which imperative “will surely take one up to the confines of Theism, if not into its actual territory”. Persistent uncertainty upon profound points should encourage the appreciation of the Revelation as a divine means of rescue from such a predicament; but, neither should CHB abdicate his responsibility to look for the solution: rather than intelligence, this requires “moral integrity + sincerity + (real) humility ... + a deep desire for truth + prayer”. CHB’s reading of history: “in the history of western Europe you can watch the tragi-comedy of le fait chrétien in one of its external aspects”. Quotes St Teresa of Ávila's Truth Itslef, in Itself.

BBB 1/48  31 January 1933
BB to CHB
Encourages CHB to persevere with his uncongenial studies, hoping he does “by degrees discover where [his] real interests lie”. Admits to particular difficulties in addressing CHB's intention to become an Anglican clergyman, in light of the obligation
“the true religion” places on BB to be a Roman Catholic, an obligation considered binding on all but the inculpably ignorant, such as, by his youth, CHB doubtless is:
BB's arguments in the past have been open rather than leading in consideration.
Addresses CHB's disappointment and disorientation, counselling “a fundamental change of will”, by which the individual may then begin “to comply with every grave demand that is made to [him] through [his] conscience”, and so begin to quiet the fear of loss of, and satisfy the desire for God that is, he suggests, the cause of his discontent. Against CHB's observation of man's natural credulity, suggests what they both must “guard against is our temperamental or acquired incredulity”.
Discusses “oughtness”, contrasting the real obligation of a categorical moral imperative with duty, and accepting ultimately the principal "conscientia (the judgement, not the feeling) semper sequenda est [conscience is the only thing that matters]”. Describes the voice of conscience experienced more as a momentary stream of absolute precepts than a written law, always adapting to the subject's circumstances, whilst always admitting the individual's free will: a supreme value, even over that of humanity itself, but which, nevertheless, perfects the human personality. Accepting the personal nature of this “Absolute Reality”, “one is halfway to Christian Theism”. Beside this “philosophic journey” to God through conscience, recommends the better, more basic, route through an appreciation of the multiplicity and plenitude of Creation. Recommends A. E. Taylor's The vindication of religion in Essays Catholic and critical, § II From man to God; The unrealists by Harvey Wickham; and Orthodoxy and Heretics by G. K. Chesterton. Urges CHB not to allow his current intellectual difficulties to impede his participation in “the Christian heritage with its richness of mysticism and its bracing via crucis”. Encloses part of an article by BB on The teaching and claim of Jesus, written for the Downside Review [Issue 51 (April 1933): 251-65]: “it is more mature than the lectures began by being”. Asks for CHB's prayers.

Denies possessing a “particular brand of Catholicism”, quoting remark on the faith of a paysanne bretonne attributed to Louis Pasteur, and stating “[t]he approach to the true religion may differ greatly from man to man, but the religion itself, once arrived at, is the same for all”. Defends the Church against charge of expediency: discusses lies and mental reservations, moral evils and physical evils. “[A]ll is not flux ... the end justifies the means ... is not a Catholic idea”. Moral feelings participate in forming a moral judgements, but such feelings must sometimes be overridden, citing example of Anglo-Catholic converts' common feelings of guilt at the first confession. Tolerating an irreducible core of mystery, Catholic thinkers nevertheless “cannot abide inconsistency or self-contradiction; and we like to locate obscurity at its right spot on the map”. A remark of Fr K [?Fr Ronald Knox] addressing this subject is indicative of “one who stands outside the developing and accumulating tradition of Catholic Christian thought”.

Answers CHB on the physical properties of matter, and proposed types of causality, and rejoins “a man's fully deliberate acts of choice are not <fully> necessitated by any created thing, not even his own nature: they are, indeed, caused by God". Discusses terms catholic, Roman Catholic and papist. To CHB's proposal that BB's argument for the probability of divine Revelation be added to the arguments of Fr [Ronald] Knox [?for the existence of God], BB retracts the concept of such an intrinsic antecedent probability, proposing such a possibility instead. Tentatively finds in man's divine discontent across history a preparation for the reception of the Revelation; “[a]t least one can be sure that there is nothing in human nature that makes it impossible for God to reveal Himself to man”, as a rational creature. BB's belief in the demonstrability of the existence of God, as a philosophic truth; but that the Trinity and the Incarnation do not admit such natural demonstration, but rather demand faith: “I believe them because the general credentials of Christianity impose themselves on my conscience, and Christianity says these mysteries are true”. Thanks CHB for his good wishes [on BB's ordination], and reaffirms his vocation.

"If Western civilisation is in the melting-pot (communism, Fascism, Hitlerism, Rooseveltism, Catholic Social Movement ..., disarmament and international armament-manufacturers, reformed League of Nations ... oh, the fascination, the dangers, the potentialities of the time we live in), is there no way, for one who is not going to become a priest or a parson, of serving humanity more directly than by Chatham St., a family, and a little philanthropy in his leisure moments? Don't you feel the needs of men, like a pain inside you, like a fire in your bones, like the pain-contracted features of an infant who can't express its want?" Corrects CHB's interpretation of what is required of him, substituting a "peaceful and blissful surrender" for CHB's "absolute and agonizing" one. BB acknowledges CHB might best serve God as a married man or a business man. Diagnoses a lack of confidence. Counsels prayer "of the heart & the will". Defends BB’s use of the word surrender. “The mental attitude of surrender seems to me incumbent on is at all times: the actual material surrender of this or that should wait on His Will.” Quoting Shakespeare’s Sonnet 57 (Being your slave, what should I do but tend), and St Augustine’s Fecisti nos ad te, Domine ... [You have made us for yourself, Lord ...] [Book I.1], counsels against feverish impatience, emphasising the ultimate Peace in God. “The strong irresistible Life, that is the ocean on which all things float, is too deep for anything to disturb its repose.” Concludes, “I could wish you nothing better in this life than that your will and His should be one in motive act and end - that you may live, no longer you, but Christ in you.”

[Date uncertain.] BB numerates non-moral goods; opines actions may not be non-moral; defines a morally good action as that which “tends to realise the end for which we were born”; acknowledges some morally good actions are not concerned with the good of others - “indeed, the highest simple act of which we are capable here is I suppose one in which, so far as in us lies, we forget all creatures in an act of complete self-donation to our heavenly Father”. Qualifies CHB’s thesis that self-expression is the goal of life: the possession of the goal extinguishes desire and identifies the self in the goal, such that self-expression terminates in deification. Remarks against the accidental character of man’s path to truth, likening it to the course of a mountain spring and gravitation. Provides three questions to CHB for response, explicitly designed to lead to an affirmation of the doctrines of the Incarnation and the Trinity and to elucidate CHB’s “basic religious problem”. BB finds CHB’s list of “insurmountable difficulties” in Catholicism “faintly amusing”, querying his dogmatic skepticism and inferring unobjective prejudice. Emphasises that CHB “ought to accept some one of the possible answers to the religious question”, which acceptance will meet CHB’s requirement for a “practical certainty ... which will justify a certain act and habit of will”; and the necessity that the truth of Christianity be evident to those of normal intellect. Via John Henry Newman’s historical facticity of Christianity, urges CHB to seek to “discern the central, typical and historically normal Christian phenomenon”.

BBB 1/65  Friday [?6] [April 1934]
BB to CHB
[Date uncertain.] BB addresses various points in CHB’s letter. Agrees with CHB that “our goal will entail the perfection of self-consciousness” but also that “absorption in the beloved” aids this process - “love stings a man into a deeper awareness of the world and himself”. Refers to [Francis Thompson's] The hound of heaven. BB clarifies his religious profession: “[w]hat I wanted was: the true religion; not a matter of this or that doctrine but, where, if at all, was one to find that way of life which was God’s will for man?” BB refers back to his three questions [BBB 1/64], arguing CHB defer his consideration of the divinity of Christ until after he accepts Jesus as God’s envoy to mankind. BB contradicts CHB’s statement that no normal type of Christianity can be discerned. BB’s health almost restored. BB has directed Felix [Butler] to an article on Evil by Father [Martin Cyril] D’Arcy, published by the Catholic Truth Society. Proffers four further points of discussion: the demonstrability of God by “careful thinkers”; God as ens a se [a being in itself]; the inference and origin of absolute moral obligations; the reasonableness of “the concept of [the] absolute & infinite Desirable”. BB to spend a week at Worth Priory, until Monday 16 April.

BB to CHB

Account of BB's early struggles with faith, developing Christian beliefs, conversion to Roman Catholicism and subsequent spiritual growth. Quoted below in full.

8 - 4 - 34.

My dear Cuthbert,

It would not be easy to give the whole history of my conversion, and of course my mind did not stop working when I became a Catholic, so that I might stress individual arguments in different proportions now from then.

Intellectual difficulties about Christian doctrine had been with me I suppose from the age of 13 or thereabouts. As for Rome I read Gore's Claims [Roman Catholic Claims] when about 16 (?) and was so well satisfied that I did not then look back at Dom John Chapman's reply to it. At Oxford, in my last years before Keble! my problem was still rather whether Christianity was true or not than whether The Anglo-Catholic position was tenable against Rome - though I had consciously felt it improbable that all that I had accepted by tradition should turn out true; and though also I had felt <then or later> that the line of argument from corporate religious experience which had appealed to me as justifying Catholic Christianity might be pressed to justify Roman Catholicism.

I became an Anglican deacon in 1926, being at the time, as regards Biblical criticism, extremely liberal; and not consciously accepting any Infallibility whether of Pope, episcopacy or Church or, I fear - God forgive me - of our Lord's human intellect. One of my difficulties in connection with ordination was that the C. of E. expected me to accept the Creeds including <presumably (?)> our Lord's Virgin Birth and Resurrection yet without backing them by any claim to infallibility in her teaching - or as it seemed to me: she held that the Churches of Rome, Alexandria and Constantinople had erred - then why not also Canterbury? On the other hand, I did not believe in my personal infallibility, hence my difficulty in tying myself to detailed credial assertions - my intellect was rather attracted by A. E. J. Robinson's theory that the general trend of the Church's mind was indefectible (by which he meant that if a false step were taken on one side here, it would be redressed by another later there, and on the whole truth's area was increasing or at least could not eventually disappear) rather than that any particular formula was to be accepted because infallible.

But I had already met Fr Vernon, and had been profoundly impressed by him as a spiritual force, as one devoted to God and on fire with God. I remember putting to him a difficulty I had about the personality of the Holy Spirit, and pointing out that on my principle of indefectibility the Church might have gone wrong here - I think I felt a little as though the suggestion were absurd, and I remember he took the line that if we could trust her anywhere we might on such a point. You see the complications, the unsolved difficulties of principle, under which I laboured at that time? <Long> before any ordination, I am pretty sure, I knew that Vernon was in Roman difficulties, and I was probably aware that unityauthority and the evidence of supernaturalised lives (i.e. Ste Thérèse of Lisieux) were tempting him to go towards Rome. Moreover, just before becoming a clergyman I had my weeks in Germany with Martin [Hancock], and was there faced by a Catholicism that held the population as I had never been conscious of religion doing elsewhere where I had been. This helped to bring the Church before my mind as an actual reality.
At the time of my ordination, then, I was divided between my purely intellectual liberalism and non-acceptance of infallibility <on one side>, and, <on the other>, deep spiritual instincts pointing me to Rome along with of course the superficial attraction of swimming with the stream of advanced Anglo-Catholicism. I held that, in practice, Roman methods etc. were preferable, so far as loyalty & sincerity allowed of them. I was impressed by the Sarum usages of Fr. Hancock's church at Muswell Hill, but I held that the Anglo-Catholic movement's most significant element had rejected Sarum for Roman usage, and that it was [a] waste of time to question that decision. This sounds trivial, but man is not in concreto a merely rational animal, and I would have you see me at that time as an extremist with a liberal mentality that was as yet <more or less perhaps> conscious of unsolved problems and issues deeper than those of Biblical criticism. About now I had made friends with the modernist J. S. Beggart of Ripon Hall and if I helped to bring him temporarily in the Anglo-Catholic direction, he made it perhaps harder for me to acquiesce in Anglo-Catholic revolt against the bishops.

When I had been a clergyman for a few months, a St John's man I knew fairly well, and respected without liking, a very extreme A.-C., became a Catholic; and about the same time I found that Martin [Hancock] was having Roman difficulties. It was about now that I really began to face up to the thing. A little later, Vernon put before me a possibility of my joining him in a certain project, and I told him that my consent must anyhow depend on my Roman trouble being settled. As the year wore on, I decided not to be ordained priest in my then frame of mind, and I felt that the danger of my becoming a R.C. was so real that I had better resign from Keble. Then came my first visit to Downside and a decided tilt Romeward, but I was hung up for a long time by historical difficulties, and difficulties about the truth or/and inspiration of the Bible, besides the root spectre of sheer disbelief in Christianity and even in God which I found still required to be laid. In the following March (?) I stated the case, in effect, thus: personally religion is a valid factor of human experience; but religion has always, except per accidens, been the religion of a society; and no religious society can rival the claims of the R.C. Church (you note, that the phantom of a society that included Rome, the East & C. of E. had by now faded from my mind). On the strength of this I got my reception fixed up, but hesitation centring in the Church's teaching about the Bible led me to put it off, and it was not till some time later that, convinced as I was that the thing required decision one way or the other, I was received in mental suffering and spiritual blankness. On the whole, I did not get much satisfaction out of my Catholicism till after I had come here as a postulant - but will, not feelings, is what counts before God.

That is a very inadequate account, but it may serve to set the ball rolling; I have sporadic notes (not unfortunately dated for the most part) which record ideas in my mind <at times> in the 2 or 3 years before my reception or the months or more succeeding it. So fire away with your questions. My hope of course is that you will see the im-probability of the C. of E. position and that God will lead you on as He led me. As I look back I <ought to be> so profoundly thankful to the Wisdom and Providence that guided me by the paths I knew not and accidents outside my control, in spite of my own perhaps excessive caution, to This Way as <in> Acts Christianity is described. May He lead you to the same Way and to that union with Him which is a reason for its existence.

Love. Basil.

BB to CHB [at Cambridge]
Apologises for over-emphasising Thomistic arguments in their discussions:
“remember, as I ought to do, that our Lord and His Church are religious teachers, not university Professors”. Advocates an argument for the historicity and divinity of Jesus Christ, and also the Catholic Church’s role as a “divinely guaranteed teacher”, leading from the Gospels to the fulfilment of prophecy and to “the fact of miracles”, including “the moral miracle of the Church and her achievements, specially the Saints”. Quotes a paragraph from BB’s own lay-master teaching notes, emphasising “[n]ow the body is essential, but it is not the important part ... the overwhelmingly more important part is the moral and religious teaching, influence and new inspiration tha(t) has spread through the world”: yet from this un-prioritised but essential incarnational element derives the authority of the visible Church, and sacraments, a “marvellous marriage of the soaring spirit and the concrete matter-of-fact”.
“Christianity lives in and by this great society and members organism.” Recommends again Von Hügel’s Essays and addresses on the philosophy of religion. Identifies CHB’s reluctance to concede the Church’s duality his resistance to [then unsubstantiated] historical elements in the Gospels and Catholic doctrine, and notes that the Christian’s progress in knowledge generally concerns the deeper apprehension of a few propositions “recited perhaps almost mechanically from childhood”, rather than in the accumulation of fresh ones. Attributes the [inferred] strengthening of CHB’s convictions when in discourse with BB not to a temporarily disarmed critical faculty but to a sympathy of mind and stronger intuition of truth when allied with BB’s “more vigorous security on intuitions”: in such a surer intuitive state BB questions if CHB is not himself more authentic. Rejoices in CHB’s avowed rationalism, reassuring him that “[t]o want Him is so great a step on the way to finding Him: to will His will <fully> even when we don't know <fully> what it is, this is already to be doing His will, to possess Him”; and while stating that this will be fully realised once within the Roman Catholic Church, suggests such a realisation might also precede this “if [one has] this full will”.
Endorsement in CHB’s handwriting: “You can’t say that X is a complete revelation of God until you have apprehended that revelation fully. But having got that full apprehension you have got as far as X. But if you have got as far as X you have denied the uniqueness of X.”

Advises CHB to postpone any decision as to a career in the [family] wine-merchant trade at Chatham Street, [Reading], until his final term at Cambridge; deters him, privately, from sentimental family arguments in this direction - “family traditions were made for man, and not vice versa” - and suggests his education at Cambridge will make him unsuited for such work; Considering the all-pervading role of Providence with CHB’s luxury and responsibility to make such a choice, urges “I would not have anything else much besides the eternal considerations weigh with you in deciding your future”. “I admit that I think more of how, if you choose the best way, God’s glory will be increased by a fuller outpouring of His love on one of his creatures, than of the blessedness that this means for you. But you would wish me to put things in this order.” Warns of risk of engrossment in empty “worldliness”, and, while acknowledging “sanctity is possible in any legitimate walk of life”, maintains “everyone who grows up mentally as well as physically, and who lives the normal span, has a vocation to sanctity”.

per se, and cites authorities of Friedrich von Hügel, John Henry Newman and [on mere report] Arnold Lunn: the latter’s trust justified, in distinction to CHB’s distrust, “because it coincides with a vast and morally miraculous consensus”. Emphasising the importance of infallibilism from the earliest time in the Church's history, earnestly urges CHB to abandon a sophistic and childish argument “for the light and fuller grace of Catholicism”. Postpones a defence of Thomism; warns against placing too Likens errors of reason, as urged by CHB, to “imprudent doubts”, and which, contrary to CHB's suggestion, should not be allowed to deflect one's action or, latterly, to invalidate the belief of a Catholic convert. Explores the limits of grace in the operation of the moral duty to believe in the Catholic Church: “real grace does come in to help a man to the point of saying I ought to and do believe, but up to and including I ought to ... the operations of the intellect are not transformed by grace; in the act I do believe, when made by a soul in a state of grace the intellect is not only helped but elevated to a higher plane by grace”; but this does not amount to a special personal revelation. Huby, S.J., Alexendre Brou and M. C. D'Arcy, S.J. (editor). Even for its critics, Christianity as a religio-historical phenomenon alone is worthy of serious study: “[s]ee, and marvel at, even if you cannot yet assent to, its sublime yet humble certitude of mission, of truth possessed, of divine protection and divine indwelling”, and contrasting its revelatory roots with its “coolly intellectual” philosophy. Critical of [?]CHB's prioritising of “laboratory theorizing ... academia ... Compares his conversations, when in a similar mental state as CHB, with [Mark Rodolph] Carpenter-Garnier at Pusey House, Oxford, and the latter's riposte that specious arguments are inadequate with regard to degradation and poverty - “Nothing except the Cross can meet their case”. Challenges CHB on his imputed bad faith, his shameless impertinence, and the characteristic flimsiness of his varsity “quasi-philosophic structure”. Against CHB's insistence on personality, BB presents St Paul's “second Adam”: “this process is not just the placid evolution of natural potencies, but the hyper-tragic sanative and elevative transformation of fallen nature by the grace won on the Cross”. “They say Hell is paved with good intentions; well, it is carpeted with bright ideas.”

BBB 1/88  17 April 1936
BB at Erdington Abbey, Birmingham, to CHB
CHB’s reference to anti-intellectual currents in his last letter has attracted great interest from BB and Fr Mark [Pontifex]; and which BB finds reflected in CHB’s illogical rejection of papal infallibility. Counters that the intellect’s desire to know and its “vital action” does not end with the discovery and acceptance of truth, but is on the contrary fertilised by it: cites Aristotle’s observation on the conjunction of the present and perfect tense verb forms in Greek [Metaphysics, Book IX, 6]; “a thing of beauty ... its loveliness develops my capacity to appreciate it”. Encloses a copy of the [Downside] Review, containing an article by Fr Mark [Pontifex]. Tentatively arranges a meeting at Cambridge, where BB is to give “conferences” at Fisher House in late April-early May. On Providence - “a magnificent subject” - recommends: the appendix on the propria causa in Réginald Garrigou-Lagrange’s Dieu, son existence, et sa nature; Archbishop Richard Downey’s Providence; relevant sections of St Thomas Aquinas’ Summa; and The pain of this world and the providence of God by Martin Cyril D’Arcy S.J.

CHB at 10 Park Street, to BB
Provides a précis and comment upon Max Planck’s The philosophy of physics, as reviewed in the Times Literary Supplement, and finds in Planck’s statements on faith echoes of BB’s critiques of scientific methodology. Also comments upon the article in the Downside Review by Fr Mark Pontifex, characterising his certainty as immutable and as such psychologically and philosophically impossible: “it is positively immoral to agree never to doubt again”. Identifies in BB’s statement, “though one may and must resign oneself, in this life, to mysteries, no-one can really accept contradictions” [see BBB 1/88], a justification for his insistence on retaining his intellectual autonomy in the face of papal infallibility, and uses Hitlerian analogy: “[i]t is thus I only who am infallible for myself, and then only for the moment in which I am living and not for future moments ... I may stake my life [with the decisions of experts], but I can never stake my mind”. Defends a scientific incrementalism, and a growing body of evident scientific principles against which the concept of infallibility errs.

BB to CHB
Re Planck, clarifies his own position on free will. Restates the terms of his own belief in infallibility - or to any doctrine - in terms more acceptable to CHB, reserving his future free will by logical necessity, and his intellectual autonomy by logical delegation: “I have and now believe that the Church is, has been and will be divinely preserved from error in religious fundamentals ... not ... I shall still be believing that tomorrow” ... “trust is the only reasonable course”. Calculating machine analogy. Accepts that such beliefs are more than transitory, but defers discussion. Accepts Theological Society's invitation [approved by abbot and headmaster]: offers “Super-history” or “Metachronics” as titles, and sketches a theme bringing out the essential quality of Christianity in the New Testament. On divine providence, directs CHB to St Thomas Aquinas' Summa, part I, Question 22, with the notes and appendix of [Antonin-Gilbert] Sertillanges; [Réginald Marie] Garrigou-Lagrange's God [God. His existence and His nature.] ; by repute, Fr Martin Cyril D'Arcy's The pain of this world and the providence of God; and [Richard] Downey's essay on the same topic; and deprecating limited deity theologies as per Wells' God the invisible king as "idolatry". CHB at 10 Park Street, to BB Offers his thanks for BB's hospitality at Downside. Criticises BB's definition and defence of infallibility, to which BB adds marginal comments. BB contradicts CHB’s contention that the doctrine is a meta-belief: CHB writes, “[i]nfallibility ... is a doctrine that a <specific> authority can give certainty: I can only assent to the doctrine that in particular instances it can give certitude”. (Marginal note: BB makes the distinction between acting on best available but incomplete criteria “rightly” while yet erroneously, and, using judicial analogy, implies a duty to act despite such risk.) Drawing upon his own experience, CHB defines beliefs as mutable and pragmatic, and finds the [?Anglican] Church “worth backing” having “on the whole ... made a good job of religion”. Addresses calculating machine analogy.

BBB 1/94  31 July 1936
BB to CHB
BB returned from Reading; news of family. Corrects CHB's definition of the doctrine of infallibility: rather than papal authority imbuing certainty in others, “[i]t means simply that, in defining issues of faith or morals, and when he speaks as Pope to the whole Church in so defining, the Pope does not declare to be true (or right) what is false (or wrong). ... It is a doctrine about divine Providence”, rather than “a belief about my own or another's mind”. As such, CHB's certitude is not transgressed; his distinction certitude/certainty anyway questioned. Suggests (and solicits) the admission that the doctrine may be true “implies no certainty either in your mind or the Pope's or anybody else's, except indeed such certainty as is implicit in every act of human affirmation, even the most problematical”. Hints the source of CHB's misunderstanding and resistance to such “a very simple point” is the presence of another undeclared “antagonist” in the debate; and if the resistance is CHB's alone “I should take it as a clear indication of the appalling proportions of the misunderstandings with which Catholicism has to contend.” Suggests What is Christianity? as title for his talk to the Theological Society - an historical analysis of Christianity as revealed in the documents of its earliest period; diary conflict. CHB travels to Brittany on Wednesday. Promises to send an article by Brother Illtyd [Trethowan]. Makes psychological observation on CHB's unrestrained, dogmatic negativism; a censor seems to prohibit affirmatives. Comments on “anxious business” of Spain: “if it becomes Bolshevistic, I wonder whether France will follow suit.” Requests the enclosed Review be sent on to Felix [Butler], who is to read [article titled] Some hidden hands.

Thanks for CHB's hospitality and company: “[i]t was a joy to get in some real talks with you”. Wishes CHB luck with his essay. Wishes CHB might join DD Mark and Illtyd's philosophical debates on space and time. Comments on Songs in the night by a Poor Clare Colettine: “not verse, but a sort of series of mystical outpourings that seem to me to have behind them something more than an abstract knowledge of the theory of prayer and the life of faith”. Clarifies BB's understanding of the relations between faith and reason: faith vivifies reason; “fidelity to reason will lead the unbeliever beyond reason to faith” and stabilise and give “poise to all his rational activity”. Contends, “we have not to choose between reason and faith; nor even between reason plus faith and reason without faith; but between UNREASON, and a faith that reason prescribed and by which reason is reinforced”; and, quoting Swinburne and Marx, models this dynamic relation on that of the Incarnation and the Resurrection, the natural finding its “subsistence” in the supernatural. This is reflected in the Roman Catholic Church's perceived otherworldliness and pragmatism - “it may be that it has really found a higher principle of synthesis than that proffered wither by Protestantism or by secularism”. BB exploring the subject of Lewis Carroll or the topic of Nonsense for a fifth form Literary Society talk; requires Emile Cammaerts' The poetry of nonsense. BB contradicts CHB's description, via Storer, of his argument to him for the existence of God as indeed one from the necessity of a First Cause: “I am inclined to think the argument of causality is the one and only rational argument for God”. Requests CHB send to their mother articles by BB published in the Downside Review.

The philosophy conference cancelled. The invitation to CHB to visit Downside and debate nevertheless repeated. BB and Fr Mark's debates continue - on substance and accidents, and movement and material reality: “my mind works with difficulty at these rarefied levels”. BB's Synoptic studies of Q and Mark “fascinating”: against Streeter BB contends with “the theory that Mark is based on Matthew, while Luke is based on Mark and (in parts) Matthew”. The J.T.S. [Journal of theological studies] has rejected Br Bernard's article, due to his unorthodox dating of St Matthew's Gospel and 1 & 2 Thessalonians, though [?Henry] Hart has been kind: the Revue biblique an alternative. Further addresses points in CHB's essay: exclusion of uncaused events; disqualification of non-action as an event, resistance or act; motivation as the criteria for free will rather than objects; duty implies freedom of action. Rejects CHB's analysis of moral action and denial of the moral category: via Homer's Achilles, Shakespeare, Juvenal and Kant, the moral judgement of conscience, of praise or blame, “(the kind of which our Lord was speaking when he said Judge not and ye shall not be judged)”, “is not an illusion created by the Jewish-Christian tradition; it is a universal natural conviction”. “You are like an inquisitor with Galileo; and Galileo will still say E pur si muove”. BB finds CHB guilty of attempting to place basic practical moral principles into the category of contradictions - an attempt in itself a contradiction of philosophical enterprise; a consequence of CHB's treatment of God “as real and active only in the same sort of way in which finite things are real and active”. BB departs for Rome this evening.

Discusses CHB's future career: argues against entering the Anglican clergy without careful thought. "It might do more harm than good if I gave my full reasons, but there is at least this that I can say: you will feel the seductive temptation of indeterminate intellectual compromise strongly, but you are intellectually alive enough - quite! - to know that compromise is reason's hell. If you won't mistake my meaning, I may say that you won't find what you know your reason demands except in Catholicism or (per impossibile) in something as positive and logical as Catholicism is. A position which is just not Catholicism is intellectually far worse - or may be - than a diametrically anti-Catholic but thought out position may be. ... Remember the difference between deliberately adopting a position you know can't be right, and not adopting a position you do not yet know to be right".

BB to CHB
Takes up CHB’s reference to the raptures of the mystic, but warns “the goal of the mystic is outside this life, and ... the road to it is an extremely dark, painful and bitter one. It is the road our Lord took ... a dangerous road.” Advises CHB that thought is an austere discipline, which, while autonomous within its own limits, must lead from analysis to synthesis and action: “[thought] teaches us that there is a place for authority, and that to reject authority, in matters of truth, where authority is legitimate, is to be unfaithful to the autonomy of thought itself”. Makes reference to Aquinas’ Contra gentiles, and his insistence of God as “uncauised”. Counsels CHB to accept his current romantic suffering: “if one does not contract into one’s shell at the approach of suffering, if one accepts it with open arms, and without being soured or discouraged or ham-strung by it, it is a supreme privilege, and can be made a means of much deeper and more fruitful union with our Lord and his Cross.” Reminds CHB of the possible benefit to his beloved derived from his suffering, and that his ultimate partner will profit by “the power of understanding, sympathy and tenderness that this experience will have built up”. Redirects CHB’s thoughts concerning his unemployment, to consider the true vocation of affirming the will of God as one’s own. “The core of existence is there, and God forbid that we should miss it because we want to see some outward expression or some fruit of our labour. We only exist in order that our natural relation of dependence on God and orientation towards Him should be re-stated freely by our will, and that free re-statement then eternalised by God who both comes before, and comes after, our free activity.” In considering this, CHB advised to trust his deeper self, which deeper reason is preferred to the idola scholae [academic fetishism] of CHB’s “theories and anti-theorism”: “some people are liable to let what their superficial ... self presents to them as their rational tenets, to obstruct the perfectly reasonable, though less articulate, reaction of their self to the situation as they really, deep down, see it”.

BB to CHB
Referring to both BB's own theosophical (as against [Charlie Dunbar] Broad) and [?John] Chapman's synoptic arguments, regards their poor reception to date as due either to misunderstanding or novelty. BB hopes Adcock will debate with Fr Mark - “a philosophical arguer with a real zest for the game”. BB rejects CHB's comment that BB “was educated in an essentially [sic] apologetic tradition”: “I have allowed my intellect to go forward on its task of discriminating truth from falsehood and accepting the former, and you have not yet got to the stage of positive results. ... I suggest that agnosticism is at least as good a subject for criticism as belief”. Concern that CHB is currently in a - probably only superficial - intellectual position incompatible with religion. Aiming for the goal of “considered experience”, counsels CHB refer his personal thinking to an “outside tribunal” of other minds, which tribunal, formulated correctly, should lead CHB “not only to theism but to Catholicism”, as they did BB in his time. Such considered experience the criteria for true reasonable judgement on such matters, and as such this is more truly reasonable than any academic conclusion stemming from [CHB’s] “faith based on reason”: “for man is not an animal with a reasoning faculty located inside him; he is a reasoning animal, and he thinks - to use a metaphor which you will make allowances for - with his whole self”. Criticises CHB's apparent identification of conviction with apologetics, and that “one can [not] be at once fully convinced and fully critical”: “[t]hat seems to me to mean the pessimistic and not obvious notion, that the human intellect is a priori doomed never to see its native impulse come to fruition.”

Questions CHB on his recent visit to Marburg and its environs. BB has visited their parents, and then Martin [Hancock]; returns to Downside on 29th August. BB learning squash, taught by a Downside boy staying at Worth Priory. Relays England test match score; and comments on Franco's reply about the evacuation of foreign fighters. Queries quality of news reporting within Germany against English weekly digests sent from home. Reading Barchester pilgrimage and Brave new world, the latter “unnecessarily coarse (or worse), but appears to have a good moral”: “I think we need to work at the preparation of a sound philosophic basis for some future society if and when the modern post-Renaissance culture really breaks. I should think you might find your time in Germany really enlightening in this connection”. Smoking a pipe - a gift from their father. BB hopes to continue his intellectually stimulating synoptic studies; anticipates “schoolmastering for several years yet”. Recommends CHB visit the “splendid” Worth Priory. Downside [pupil] numbers increasing, “which is a great comfort”.
2p
BB at Downside Abbey, to CHB

CHB's description of Marburg reminds BB of Freiburg and Baden: contrasts "the ordinary Englishman's idea of Germany to the old Germany still precariously alive beneath the surface of industrialism and modern politics", and considered against modern times finds in medieval culture, despite manifest "evils and imperfections", much that would have been better retained than lost. CHB with "a good German family ... near the roots of a healthy natural life": while admitting to nostalgia, BB notes "a corporate change of heart and a new vision" is needed in order to achieve a synthesis of the pre-modern and the modern. Sympathises with CHB's embarrassment over his poor German; recalls BB's European travels: dislike of Italy; the qualities of England. CHB's thesis continues satisfactorily: BB welcomes this original element in his course of education - "man is essentially a creator" - and contrasts this freedom with the modern mechanisation of the economy and society at the expense of individual freedom and mastery. BB clarifies his characterisation of philosophic endeavour in the cultivation of humanity, noting as secondary the distractions of both dogmatism and flux, in settled and unsettled times respectively, that can deflect sound philosophic principles. "I think an age of agnosticism may make life nasty, short, brutish and intolerable" [misquoting Hobbes' Leviathan]. Huxley's Brave new world reviewed: "unnecessarily (in my view) beastly in places but ... a fundamentally right-minded critique of the modern idolisation of comfort-through-material-progress ... altogether it is revolting, and Huxley means that it should seem so". Considers Felix and Mary [Butler]'s outlook, work and, with regard to Felix in particular, milieu. Account of the annual meeting of the League of Christ the King, with a description of its members and mission: BB recommends CHB visit one of the groups of this "incipient" movement on his next Downside visit.

Relief and anxiety at the prime minister's broadcast statement from Downing Street. BB open to, and willing to promote, ecumenical “prayer-hymn-teaching” services in Catholic churches, citing such a service held near Berlin, and the pope's epithet the common Father: “his paternal character surely extends in some sense to all his contemporaries”. Assures CHB, “whatever you feel”, he has “a friend against the world in the pope”. Explains how a non-Catholic theist is both close to the Catholic Church and against it, and relays a witticism on the beliefs of Lord Halifax and Cardinal Bourne. BB sure that many non-Catholics' belief is in fact founded not just in their autonomous reason but “in the authority of God self-revealed in Christ ... and is therefore, despite his surface-mind, at heart one with the Church against the world”; and expounds briefly on the distinction between speaking “a word against the Son of Man” and “against the Holy Ghost” [Luke 12:10]. Urges CHB “to hear His voice pleading in hers [the Catholic Church's]”, and allow his will to “follow where the intellect's light had pointed the way”. Consoles CHB for his spiritual suffering, but counsels that the sanity and balance he seeks is best found through the Passion, by which one suffers not alone but with Christ. In two postscripts, requests CHB to continue to write, and to read the Bible, specifically the New Testament. BB does not anticipate immediate war between Britain and Germany, “unless Herr Hitler does something un-called for beyond merely marching into Czechoslovakia and crushing resistance”; CHB therefore still has time to continue his studies.

Thanks CHB for the third of his German [language] letters. Anticipates a peaceful time once the term ends. BB recalls a visit to a synagogue at Basel: “I felt all goose-fleshy about it”. BB’s article arguing the non-existence of the Synoptic text Q, to be published in the Harvard Theological Review. BB requests CHB visit Downside School on his return from Germany to give a talk on his impressions, particularly for the benefit of one pupil who is pro-Hitler and pro-Mosley - “up to a point at least”.

BBB 1/135  14 May 1939
BB to CHB
Thanks CHB for confiding his thoughts on his ordination in the Church of England. Envies CHB's meeting with [?Karl] Barth [?at Basel, Switzerland]: “there must be something great about him”. Responds to CHB on the “usefulness of Christianity for saving men's souls”; and the personality of God - “not per se a limiting concept”, in contrast to impersonality. BB half-heartedly suggests schoolmastering, university extension lecturing and W.E.A. work. Again invites CHB to Downside Abbey to visit. Acknowledges CHB's congratulations on BB's [unidentified] article: “I am sure of my position”.

BBB 1/137  16 July 1939
BB to CHB [?in Britain]
BB expresses desire to meet [Alexander Roper] Vidler: comments on CHB's broad - “weird” - circle of acquaintances. Responds to CHB's refutation of Kant with a brief four point logical argument, and refers him to [Joseph] Maréchal's _Le Thomisme devant la philosophie critique_. Wishes he might write on the subject himself, but held back by his not being a “professional philosopher”, and schoolmastering: “I build a foolish day-dream of getting back to the things of the mind when I am about 52!!”

BBB 1/138  1 September 1939
BB to CHB [in Britain]
War probable. Specially glad to have seen CHB. BB, drawing from Providence, confident in CHB’s obedience to his conscience “both in general and in detail”: “[a]nd I trust that you will keep your will from resentment against any individual or society”. Requests CHB pray for the boys BB has helped to educate.

BBB 1/139  5 September 1939
BB to CHB
Notes, perhaps in sympathy with CHB, the Butler family has “the fear emotion ... in an exaggerated form”; but reminds CHB of the usually quite tolerable realisation of what has been intolerably anticipated. Compares his fear of hell as liquefying, but “at a level, I hope, just not as deep as the final determinants of character and action”. BB not prepared to criticise [Anglican] theological colleges as unfairly as CHB: “[o]f course I dislike a system which implores beliefs whose truth it is not prepared to guarantee”. Counsels CHB be “tranquil deep and persevering” in his prayers, rather than “passionate”; and consoles him in his “helpless” circumstances to follow Christ's example on the cross “to transmute this ... into victory”. “This strange dream + nightmare of life will soon be over, and then we can talk heart to heart.”

BBB 1/140  8 September 1939
BB to CHB
BB provides the criteria for a just war, and analyses the current war against these criteria. Emphasising the government as the moral actor, with authority in the State, to which "we owe it obedience where higher loyalties don't conflict", BB distinguishes a war-time volunteer from a conscript. The former has to justify his choice by himself proving the just-war criteria are met. Concludes that if the just nature of the conflict is still uncertain, a person "must at least wait till an order from the government puts him in a fresh moral situation" - trusting then to a "benefit of the doubt" principle. BB doubtful the third criteria is met in the current conflict, fearing "the breakdown of Western civilisation in Europe, and a vast increase in communism" will result. Cites (second-hand) Baldwin speaking on the same topic in 1936 [to the Guildhall on 9 November, and reported in The Times the following day]: "degradation of the life of the people ... in the end anarchy and a [sic] world revolution". BB argues the justification of the [Polish-British Common Defence] pact, and therefore any obligation thereto, is contingent on the "outcome of the pact" and "the present single moral situation"; but does not conclude the war is unjust. "We might have done better for the world in general to let the toad go on puffing itself up till it burst spontaneously," BB notes these arguments apply more to Felix [Butler] than CHB's circumstances. "I don't think it's specially uncharitable to suppose that Hitler is mad or unbalanced. Madness is not a sin."

and pessimism are delusions” - while accepting the value in objectively considering “the whole blackness of human history”: “[i]t is only per crucem [one] see[s] the transfiguration of everything in the Resurrection”. BB identifies in CHB a lack of “a deeper knowledge of the central message of the Gospel”, and, modestly, offers drafts of his synoptic lectures. Encloses family letters for distribution.

BBB 1/156 7 October 1940
BB to CHB at [37] Withdean Crescent, Brighton
BB notes CHB follows in his footsteps. Hopes CHB will not suffer overly from air raids; Downside “enjoying a rather peaceful period” in this regard. BB notes the two year hiatus in their discussions, and questions “how you formulate your position as regards the doctrinal statements you have to make”. Echoes approvingly CHB’s statement that he works “directly for the honour of God and the good of souls”, and assures him of their parents’ pride. BB has time for a little teaching this term. Downside pupil numbers maintained, despite the times.

BBB 1/159 10 May 1941
BB to CHB
Regrets they did not talk properly on their latest meeting at their parents' home. BB met Eric Phillips at Cambridge. News of old boy named Pearson. No air raids at Downside yet. Account of a land-mine at Hove or Brighton. Comment upon united intercession services - “a big problem to us Catholics” unless what is intended is “that Catholic services were to be attended by non-Catholics”. The Sword of the Spirit movement: “I am told that Rome's approval or permission is behind this, and it is an interesting development”. Notes recent papal pronouncements have recruited the support of all believers in God “in the attempt to defeat antireligious tendencies of the present age”.

BBB 1/169 6 January 1945
BB to CHB
BB returned from Reading; news of their mother's health. Describes CHB's “difficulties” about papal infallibility concern the idea of infallibility itself. BB considers the existence of a final authority in matters of doctrinal dispute, “in the first instance as a practical necessity”. “I think that if one thinks together the two propositions The church is the society of believers (societas fidelium) and The church has divine authority one gets a glimmering of why the doctrine of infallibility is (not so much reasonable, for it is a mystery, but) necessary.” Quotes from and recommends [Fr] Ronald A. Knox's Caliban in Grub Street. Jeremy reputed “an excellent child”.

BBB 1/170 21 March 1946
BB to CHB
Congratulates CHB on news of a [second] pregnancy. Recommends Infallibility by Vincent McNabb O.P., aimed at non-Catholics; but can recommend only the treatise de Ecclesia [?Van Noort's Tractatus de ecclesia Christi] with regard to CHB's interest in papal authority on non-doctrinal non-ethical matters. Restates Catholic doctrine on papal infallibility, emphasising the qualification ex cathedra, noting “it is doubtful whether he has so defined anything since 1870”, and also stating assent to lesser papal dictums may be withheld without risking categorisation as a heretic. States the primacy of papal authority over the episcopate - “but the proof of such puddings is of course in the eating”.

BB at Worth Priory, to CHB
Birthday wishes. Visit to see CHB and two [eldest] children yesterday. Expresses interest in CHB's decision concerning his future career [?and ecumenism]: “it would be interesting if you took the offer and were thus forced into a consideration of the basis of ecclesiastical unity. I think it is important to realise that though the Church will in heaven be coincident with the order of charity, a facile identification is not possible in this world; and that yet, for the sake of charity, one must do one's best to attain full ecclesiastical membership. It is true that we shall be judged by charity. But charity itself, properly understood, involves the Christian institution, i.e. all that goes to make up the visible Church; and unity. We have to maintain both charity & the Church, rather as we have to believe both in Christ's divinity and in His manhood.”. BB to JMB and CHB
Easter wishes. Thanks CHB for his letter in The Times [The purpose of punishment, 6 April 1950; page 7; issue 51659; col. D]: "[t]he moral nature of civil punishment is, I think, most vital to emphasize, since if it is once allowed that the guilty don't deserve their punishment (and unless punishment is by nature retributive, I don't see how they can), then I don't see what is to stop the state inflicting suffering on the innocent, if for reasons of state it is judged convenient to do so."

Clarifies certain points re the Anglican clergyman: firstly, that as the papal decree against Anglican Orders is not understood as an infallible one, such a clergyman could convert without denying the validity of his Orders and risk "acting a lie"; secondly, his acceptance of lay status would be an act of obedience but "not an implied assertion that [he] is only a layman. I.e. ... converts aren't bound to believe or to affirm on this matter anything that other Catholics don't believe or affirm. BB unable to visit during his short visit to Worth Priory: "I wanted to be available for the monks as much as possible".

Thanks CHB for (unspecified) literature: "how awful to think that one may be as mad as that oneself, and not know it!!" Comments again on CHB's letter to The Times: "I must say I'm horrified at the growth and encroachments of the a-moral state". Congratulates CHB on his parish's Easter offerings and his parishioners' "due gratitude" [£76 Easter offerings recorded in 1951/2 Crockford's Clerical Directory, an increase from £27 in 1949/50]. Comments on recent correspondence initiated by CHB's contributions to the debate on the Purpose of punishment in The Times. "The vocal element of the population (e.g. the Dean of St Paul's) seems extraordinarily vague about fundamental moral principles, the moral authority of the state, the sanctity of human life, the marriage-law etc. etc. etc." BB at Worth Priory on 16 May; proposes meeting at Brighton.

BB to CHB
Thanks CHB for his comments on the [Blackfriars] article. Meeting arrangements at Brighton for 17 May. Explores BB and CHB's disagreement on [Church] unity, locating the difficulty not in the nature of such unity but in "the nature of the Church herself". "Is the Church militant a Society, or is it something else? If it is a society, then I think my inferences in the article hold good." Brief justification of BB's belief in the doctrine of Infallibility. Compares CHB's attitude toward this doctrine - "so great a difficulty as to render unacceptable, for this reason alone, any religious system that claims it" - to the attitude of 19th-century scientists toward miracles, and who "were then prejudiced against historical arguments in favour of miracles alleged to have actually happened".

BBB 1/217  21 May 1950
BB at Worth Priory, to CHB
Thanks for CHB's hospitality at Brighton. Summarises CHB's position on Church unity and authority.
"We agree that the Church is the means by which the individual makes contact with God in Christ, and that the Church re-presents Christ in history and in the contemporary moment. You - to my surprise and delight! agree that before 1054 (and apart, I suppose, from the frequent periods before that date when the East was temporarily separated from the West), the Church was able to define doctrine, and that such definitions are to be believed on her authority (derived from Christ).
But you question in what sense the Church is a society, and you maintain that she can exist on earth without actual unity of government and communion. And you also ask whether it is possible to commit oneself beforehand to possible future definitions, as one does and should commit oneself to past definitions; you ask this not only in respect of the Church, but of Christ in his historical life, supposing that one were contemporary with his original disciples."
Challenges the logicality of suspending assent from future definitions when, "because they carry the [unified] Church's guarantee", past definitions have been assented: in this way the (recovered) defining power of the (restored unified) Church has already been admitted.
"My view is that the Church of the N.T. and of the first millennium was a society in the sense indicated in my Blackfriars paper ... It seems to me quite obvious and not really controvertible that two bodies that lead parallel independent lives, neither subordinate to the other or to any superior contemporary historical unity, are not one society but two. It seems clear that, for those who believe that the separated Eastern communion and the R.C. Church are onechurch, the Church must be not a society, but a movement, a tendency, a supernatural race."

Declines invitation to CHB's induction [to Orthodox] on 25 January. Queries CHB's duty to teach transubstantiation and Church unity as, respectively, "a blasphemous fable and [a] dangerous deceit". Urges CHB to befriend the Franciscans at Crawley.

CHB's improved financial position: Crawley net income of £650. BB re-reading [Fr] Ronald A. Knox's A spiritual Aeneid, “certainly makes a certain life of Anglo-Catholicism very vivid”. In the context of the Lateran Council's definition of the effect of consecration as transubstantiation, notes this is no commitment to the truth of Aristotelianism, “rather, that the truth of the Real Presence, if expressed in Aristotelian language, is Transubstantiation. What is really insisted on is that This is my body ... my blood means what it says; while at the same time nothing can be two different things at once”.

BBB 1/290  26 April 1958
BB to CHB
BB's "great joy" on seeing CHB and family. "I find it hard to bear the thought that meetings are not likely to be so easy in the future." BB calls on CHB to resolve finally his intellectual justification of the Anglican Church. [The following relevant paragraphs are quoted in their entirety.]

"There is one other thing that I have it on my mind to put to you - though, in all the circumstances, it may seem rather ironic to you, but, thank God, you have a sense of humour: I still have the feeling that you have never really faced up to the legitimacy of the Anglican position; the thing I had to face thirty years ago, when of course it was much easier for me to do so than it can be for you now. I remember you saying to me once that you could not justify the Anglican case on intellectual lines, but it worked. I cannot think that pragmatism at this particular level is really satisfactory; and in point of fact, as I wrote once in a letter to you, I don't think that even on its own merits it applies to a form of religion which has had such a field for action in England for 400 years and has left the country in the religious state in which it is at present! But I admit that no-one can prove how much of the irreligion of England today is due to the schism.

What does seem to me to be an overwhelming consideration - granted, as we both grant, that the gift of God in Christ was for all men and for all ages until the consummation of the world - is that the one society, an actual historical thing, as real and concrete as the Incarnation itself, is of the essence of that gift of God. Anyone who denies this has the massive witness of Christian antiquity against him; and he has also to face the insolubility of the ideal of Christian reunion on his premisses - it is idle dreaming, it seems to me, to hope that one day the Roman communion will renounce this idea of the single society, at the same time turning its back on the Christian past.

I know that what has always stuck in your throat is the Catholic belief that dogmatic decisions are irreversible (what is meant by the spectre-word infallibility). On this I would say that, again granted that Christianity is what we believe it to be, a divine intervention to remedy the humanly incurable mess (both moral and intellectual) into which we had got ourselves, we should expect it to function in some ways differently from a merely human discovery and device. We should expect it to demand a sort of faith which, while not unreasonable (since Christianity has adequate credentials) would yet go beyond reason in the sense that not all we were required to believe would be transparent to the light of our reasoning power. Whatever one thinks of the historicity of the Fourth Gospel (and I'm not quite an obscurantist on N.T. matters), I do think there is profound Christian truth in that incident in ch. vi where many of his disciples walked no more in his company because the teaching about the bread of life etc. was strange talk, and Jesus asks the Twelve: Would you too go away? Lord, to whom should we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. Christ, in his incarnation and in his Church, has, it seems to me, the right to ask us to accept his word as true and therefore irreformable.

Please don't think that this letter requires an answer. I only ask that, as you pray for light to decide the question of Canada correctly, so you would ask for light about the Church; a little thought, but completely surrendered prayer, are what both problems require, I think."

Reports, via a former resident of Canada, the virtues of [Oliver], British Columbia. Also reports another minor traffic accident.
BB to CHB
Notes the Bishop of Kootenay's eagerness to appoint CHB. CHB awaiting immigration permits. Considers best means of informing their mother of CHB's plans. Reacting to CHB's response to BB's call to reflect on the legitimacy of the Anglican Church, does not doubt CHB's sincerity: "I'm sure that if you saw things as I see them you would take the practical steps that would follow from such seeing. If that moment comes, I only hope I can help you all in some way".

BB to CHB
Reaction to news of a decision against CHB's immigration, and counselling acceptance of God's providence and attending to the sacrifices no longer required of him. BB preparing three lectures on the Bible and the Church, to be delivered at Edinburgh in October. "I gather that it will be as well to keep a weather eye on Presbyterian thought and prejudices - there are still Scotsmen, it seems, who love a theological argument." Anticipates his ideas on the word of God will be well received.

BB to JMB and CHB

BB to CHB at Oliver Rectory, British Columbia, Canada
Contrasts CHB's new parish, its population and extent, with his last; and the differences in culture in a "young" country: "as Aristotle put it (in somewhat different words!): though the worth of society consists in the good life, its generative cause is mere living". BB's interest in CHB's thoughts on Confucius; suspects a general over-estimation of Oriental philosophers, excepting "the Indian tradition". BB's Why Christ? delayed due to the departure of Michael Longman from the publisher Longmans - "mainly, it seems, because Longmans have decided to cut down heavily on their religious side" - and foundation of a new company [Darton, Longman & Todd]; BB expects his book to follow him. Again recommends Insight by Bernard Lonergan S.J.: "about the most exhilarating piece of thinking that I've struck for years. He ends up with a sort of interiorised, epistemologised, Thomism; but he takes the mode of thought of modern science into his scope, has exciting evolutionary ideas, and seems to me to offer a unification of one's intellectual ranges which one has hankered after ever since one began to think". Conveyed some of Lonergan's thought in a recent broadcast to 6th-formers on Neo-Thomism [BBC Radio. Philosophical Revival: The Neo-Thomists. May 15, 1959]. BB at Worth Priory for a few days last week. Reports the projected foundation of Worth senior school in September; and the opening of Downside School's two new boarding houses and theatre. Fr Lavery meeting in doubt. CHB holiday in prospect. Welcomes news of [A.C.] Bouquet, noting his adventurousness and longevity. Notes CHB’s return to the “thinking poets”, specifically Robert Browning - “the 19th century at one of its peaks”. BB recently read his Caliban upon Setebos, and One word more; considering Bishop Blougram's Apology as a topic for a school society talk next term. BB’s interpretation of the Instruction to Local Ordinaries on the ecumenical movement [1949] as cautiously “meant to give a boost to ecumenical interest and endeavour”. Encouraged by Pope John XXIII’s talk of Unity re the General Council. Notes the latency of such ideas to permeate distant regions such as CHB’s, and, inferring from a suspected predominance of Irish-influenced Catholics, anticipates anti-British and therefore anti-Protestant resistance, also coloured by Canada’s “peculiar national Catholicism”. Deprecates [CHB’s report of] the Group Life Movement: “[a]ll this sort of thing makes me feel that perhaps there is some justification for spending a lot of time on the intellectual presentation of Christianity. Br Butler, yes; also von Hügel”.
Reports on two talks given by BB to staff members of Essex Technical Colleges, and to Armed Services officers at Greenwich. Speaks tomorrow to an Association of Catholic Managers and Employers on the subject Justice, charity and the employer, chaired by Lord Pakenham. BB has agreed to write “a short book on prayer for the non-specialist”; and a series of popular articles on the New Testament. BB notes he has the ear of the public on these subjects, and the paucity of other such Catholic voices. Reports on a “fascinating” correspondence with a “Methodist (?) theologian” from Bristol on the subjects Inspiration and Criticism: “… of course he rejects both the infallibility of the Church and any sort of inerrancy of the Bible … whereas I want to keep the former and, in some sense (you might say, a rather Pickwickian sense, but you mustn’t be rude) the latter”. Church is not a menace to freedom of thought and conscience in the Western world”; at Cambridge defeated the motion Belief in a Personal God is not conducive to the good life, noting strength of Christianity there, and a weak opposing speech. At the request of Sir Griffith Williams, BB is to propose a vote of thanks to [Dr Geoffrey] Fisher [Archbishop] of Canterbury upon his relinquishing chairmanship of the Governing Bodies Association of Public Schools - a task which “amuses” BB. Interest in CHB's Lenten course, with sympathetic comments on Existentialism. “I discovered Kierkegaard for myself about a quarter of a century ago, and I thought him great. As afr [sic] as I can see, existentialism, provided it realises its function, is doing something rather different from the classical philosophy; or rather something that the classical philosophy only did as a prelude - for there was, wasn't there, something a bit Existentialist about the ancient Protrepticorum [Aristotle], books like the lost Hortensius of Cicero which intoxicated St Augustine as a young man? A great danger of the old liberal tradition in which we grew up is, that men tend to adopt a point of view which falls short of self-committal in a personal judgement; this (or that) is true, and I take the consequences. I note that in his recent book on Yoga [Mircea] Eliade says that for India, truth is not precious in itself; it becomes precious by virtue of its soteriological function - which sounds to me both rather existentialist and rather Christian.”
Reassures CHB on his literary style. Further comment on a highlight of Lonergan's Insight. Thanks CHB for his comments on BB's paper on education: notes a national preoccupation with the reform of education at the neglect of investigating its ultimate purpose; noting also The search for values by J.R. Christmas and New Year wishes. BB returned from Rome on 10 December, departing for there again on 8 September 1963. BB's report on the first session of the Second Vatican Council is quoted below in full.

"... I went to Rome with considerable foreboding. I knew there was much promising new life in the Church, but I feared that the tender growths would be crushed by the conservatism of a Council of elderly prelates. But to my surprise and delight I found that the new life was immensely stronger that I had supposed, and had penetrated into the ranks not only of younger bishops but of the college of Cardinals. I expect the papers have given you a pretty fair account of the Council. Every major act in the drama was satisfactory. First, there was the refusal to be hurried into voting members for the conciliar commissions before we had got our bearings and made some contacts. Then there was the vote of more than half the Council in favour of withdrawing the schema of the Constitution on the Sources of Revelation [Dogmatic Constitution on Divine Revelation – Dei Verbum]; the majority was however less than 2/3, and by the rules of the game we should have had to go on to discuss the details of the schema, but the Pope intervened here on the side of common sense. Lastly, there was a proposal to discuss a schema on Our Lady and postpone that on the Church; this was turned down by the Presidents of the Council - I had been afraid that the one concrete result of our first period in Council would have been a document on Our Lady which, good as it was, might have seemed like a rebuff to Protestantism. As it is, we have no concrete results to show the world so far. But what has really been accomplished is tremendous. We have seen that the forward- looming forces in the Council are stronger than those that look defensively backwards; and a large number of bishops have had an education which they can hardly entirely forget for the rest of their working lives. I spoke on four occasions (and accidentally), I was the last speaker last week before the Pope's two closing addresses. My general aim, so far as my influence goes, is to avoid all dogmatic definitions, and all non-infallible but in fact scarcely reformable declarations about open theological questions; and I have specially been watching the subject of Scripture; during the last two years there has been a discreditable unofficial campaign going on in Rome against the liberal Biblical Institute. There have been some anxious moments, and of course few bishops came with up-to-date information about NT scholarship, but so far no disaster has occurred in this field."

Notes the ill-health of Pope John XXIII and the modalities of the Council's suspension and reconvening: "... there was a feeling in Rome that so many hares had been started that any Pope would feel almost obliged to continue the Council". Consideration of the likely character of a new pope, should John XXIII die. BB probably to make his official visitations of Washington and Portsmouth, U.S.A. in June. BB's relief at the temporary release from his "domestic" responsibilities, noting the good management of Downside under the new Head master and Prior in BB's absence: "it seems far easier to help rule the universal Church than it is to manage one's own monastery!". Notes the appointment of a new Roman Catholic Bishop of Victoria, and his presence at Rome.
BBB 1/330  21 December 1962
BB to CHB
Notes their shared controversial tendencies. BB’s indicates willingness to accept Lowe’s invitation to give a series of talks to the Anglican Theol. Alumni. Reaction to CHB’s positive comments on his book [The idea of the Church] in the wake of an unfavourable review in the Times Literary Supplement; relays suggestion of Eric Mascall, “that a society is an analogical term …!” Answers CHB on the position of Our Lady in the “Christian complex”, and dogmatic definitions of the immaculate conception and the assumption, analysing the latter in the context of the resurrection. “I think that there is no necessity - at least that I can fully see - of a material continuity in order to constitute the identity of a human body (the identity is given by the continuity of the identical soul). But why demand belief in things so peripheral?” At the time of his conversion to Roman Catholicism BB a sceptic of Marianism, but an appreciation of its importance followed its acceptance: “it does justice to the bisexuality of the human race and it neatly answers Genesis ii and the motehr [sic] of all living; it balances to some extent the otherwise excessive masculinity of Christianity”. Discourses on the teaching authority of the Church. On “pure liberalism”: “I myself suspect that the answer to liberalism is that a really HUMAN union of men can only be on the basis of a common faith partially expressible in dogmatic formulae. A union based on common sentiment only would be something less than fully human.” Places the book’s arguments alongside those made by Bernard Lonergan. Notes the inadequacy of such letters to fully debate such points, and anticipates a meeting in person.

Archbishop Ramsey now unable to attend the anticipated dinner at Clergy House. BB’s conclusions as to Ramsey’s beliefs from reading two of his works: “he seems to be a high Anglican, affirming the irreformability of the dogmas of the first ecumenical Councils, and in fact holding the sort of position from which I was driven by the hard logic of thought and fact over 30 years ago. I think we may have fun, and I shall have to try and remember that the line is dialogue, not controversy!!”. BBB 1/341  21 September 1963
BB at Downside Abbey, to JMB and CHB
Departs for Rome on 26 September. Comments on visitations: a convent in North Wales this week. Enquires if CHB attended the Anglican Congress at Toronto. Welcomes Cardinal Paul-Émile Léger Roman Catholic Archbishop of Montreal's participation at an [ecumenical] meeting in Montreal [?Fourth World Conference of the Faith and Order Movement, Montreal], and has consulted with Oliver Tompkins Bishop of Bristol in preparation for the coming Council. Notes his friend John Heenan's appointment as Archbishop of Westminster, and the experience of having been considered a candidate for the role: “[h]e is a man who sees with his intellect that ecumenism is right, but all his instincts and upbringing are against it. He will be a good diocesan; and a bright, but not great, national leader of the Church”. Family news. On the appointment of Pope Paul VI: “I think the new Pope was the right choice. He is on the progressive side. Of course he hasn't got the personal attraction of his predecessor. But he is a practised man of affairs. I'm not certain that he will have the strength of will to clean out the Augean stables of the curia”. Notes the presence of Arnold Toynbee at a talk BB gave on the Second Vatican Council to a lay group at St Louis Priory, [Missouri], and his comment “that in his view [Pope] John [XXIII] had transformed the whole Christian situation simply by his charity”. Reports BB's pleasure at the award of an honorary fellowship at St John's College, Oxford; and the retirement of William Costin. Anticipates the Council being “a very long affair”: notes improvement of circulated papers on matters discussed in the first session, but dissatisfied with other schemata - “I hope the Council will insist on a lot of redrafting”.

BBB 1/342  7 October 1963
BB at Collegio Sant'Anselmo, Rome, Italy, to CHB
Congratulates CHB on family news. Reports meeting and liking Bishop De Roo, and commends a “college plan”, the success of which “may help our little plan re Bristol University”. BB addressed a meeting of English-speaking Canadian bishops on the current draft On the Church [Dogmatic Constitution on the Church - Lumen Gentium], “a vast improvement on the horror” presented last year, and noting changes BB is seeking, particularly on separated brethren. Notes dissatisfaction with current draft of a document on Our Lady, and possibility of incorporating this within [Lumen Gentium]: canvassing support for a draft by Fr Ralph Russell, a Downside monk, to win the consideration of the Council. “It of course maintains (quietly) the full dogmatic position about Our Lady, but the sources to which it refers are (a) biblical (b) the Fathers, specially Eastern ones, and mainly before 1054”. Commends Pope Paul VI's opening address: “I think there can be no doubt that he is progressive, but I think he will be perhaps more cautious, more at least of a tactician, than John XXIII”. Discounts talk of BB succeeding Cardinal [Augustin] Bea [to the Presidency of the Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity], of whom BB thinks highly; BB's good relations with the English bishops in Rome. BB's intention to lobby Archbishop Heenan for the establishment of an “ecumenical institute” in England. “Of course you know my views about ecumenism: that it seems to me there is only one way for union to be achieved. But charity and dialogue must be good things; and we certainly need a lot of both in England.” Looks forward to CHB's article in the “RC magazine”.
[Note: the “college plan” referred to above, and which is mentioned in subsequent 1960s correspondence between BB and CHB, is probably the foundation of an Anglican and Roman Catholic College at the then newly established University of Victoria. This is inferred from the title of a file binder, for the Working Committee Log, found among CHB's papers.]
BBB 1/343  9 November 1963

BB to CHB

Read CHB’s article with interest. At Bishop De Roo’s invitation, BB to address the students at the Canadian College on Love, law and latinism in the Council: with discussion of the principal arguments; the relative priorities of charity and law; the intention of the “progressives” on the Council “to redress the balance (as the Council of Ephesus needed to be redressed by that of Chalcedon) by emphasising the authority of the college of Bishops”; BB's caution against such a group being drawn by the nature of the debate into an appeal to potestas rather than to a more profound auctoritas. BB defends as factual the description of non-Roman communions as “founded on (incomplete) gospel principles”, and qualifies as incomplete, erroneous and insubstantial such communions’ supernatural reality: “…the social and visible nature of the Church reflects itself, in a way, outside its own limits in these communions [quoting from BB’s own speech on the subject] … these communions are compromise-positions; in so far as they look towards the full position, they are good; in so far as they refuse to be absorbed in the true position, they are false. Those who, in good faith, find grace in them are finding it in virtue of what is good in them, i.e. ultimately from the unique communion of the visible Church towards which that good is as it were dialectically orientated”. Recommends writers and comments on four topics raised by CHB. (a) Original unity and early divisions: S. L. Greenslade [Schism in the early Church] and BB [The idea of the Church]. (b) The Elizabethan Settlement: Philip Hughes’ The Reformation in England, vol. 3. (c) (i) The First and Second Vatican Councils: Cuthbert Butler O.S.B. and Hans Küng, respectively; (ii) the “new spirit in Rome”: Maurice Villain’s Unity: a history and some reflections; notes “a growing sense that scholasticism is a good servant but a bad master”, and the work of Karl Rahner - “one of our greatest contemporary thinkers” - and Jean Pierre de Caussade; Cardinal Bea and Fr Buckley on the liberty of conscience. (d) Doctrinal authority: koinonia [communion] is sustained by a common mind of understanding and of judgement, and conceptual expression; Kantian moral authority - “[o]bedience to it has got to find existential expression, and - since the content of the moral law is love - this expression will be in koinonia”; recommends Y. Congar’s After nine hundred years on the East-West schism, and Pierre Batiffol. Encloses a copy of a letter with news of the Council.

BB at Downside Abbey, to JMB and CHB
Christmas and New Year wishes. Returned to Downside on 5 December. Short illness. BB has promised to contribute to Bishop De Roo's journal. Comments on BB's election to the Commission on Faith and Morals [de Rebus Fidei et Moribus], and notes its strongly progressive complement, despite the number of conservatives amongst its executive - Cardinals Ottaviani and Browne, and Father Tromp S.J., and attributing largely to the latter "the dreadful draft on the Church which we massacred in 1962". Notes the Commission's responsibility also for the chapter on Our Lady, "a special source of fun for me"; has received from Hubert Box a book [of essays] on Our Lady in the Anglican tradition [? The Blessed Virgin Mary. Essays by Anglican writers]. Anticipates numerous visits to Rome on Commission business prior to the Council's reconvention in September. BB spoke three times in Council, and notes in his last speech alluding to the Anglican Communion during a debate on the draft Decree on Ecumenism [Unitatis Redintegratio]. Hopes to holiday briefly at Reading. Family news. Recounts that Cardinal Léger was present at BB's talk to the students of the Canadian College, Rome, [on Love, law and latinism in the Council].

BBB 1/345  24 December 1963
BB to CHB
CHB's lecture at Nelson, British Columbia, postponed; BB notes his meetings in Canada and Rome with the bishop there. Awaits news of CHB [and Bishop De Roo's] proposal for a "joint college" to the [?University of Victoria] Senate, and of his manuscript submitted for publication. Family news. Returns to the issue of separated Christian bodies, characterising BB and CHB's differences as merely verbal, and reiterating arguments made in The idea of the Church; affirms "[t]he positive values and status - however that status is to be defined - of the separated Christian bodies rests basically upon the abnormal foundation of an erroneous good faith, whereas the status of the Church rests upon a good faith which assents to the fullness of the objective revelation; this seems to make a radical difference between them"; agrees "so far as the separated body in fact rests upon the good faith of its members, it is in an organic relationship with the true Church; but it is a contingent, non-covenantal, relationship", nevertheless reserving to the members of such bodies access to covenanted graces, "as such graces derive from the same Covenant that is the true Church's, and so we say that these separated brethren are saved per Ecclesiam - extra ecclesiam nulla salus". Again notes Hubert Box's essays on Our Lady, presented by the author "as not indeed articles of faith but reasonable theological opinions"; planning also to read an essay in the same volume by A.M. Allchin on Our Lady in Seventeenth-century Anglican Devotion and Theology, and commending [William] Fairweather on the same period.

BB to CHB
Birthday wishes. Flies to Rome on 28 February to attend a session of the Theological Commission, a revised version of the Constitution on the Church [Lumen Gentium] being requested to be completed by the end of the month; with broad details of revisions to the schema. Expects to return by Easter [29 March]. Commends CHB’s paper on Christianity and education, noting his unfamiliarity with [Henri Irénée] Marrou’s work, and the paper’s utility as regards CHB’s negotiations with the University [of Victoria]. Summation of BB’s aims on Episcopal Collegiality [re Decree on the Pastoral Office of Bishops - Christus Dominus], with regard to the next session in Council: “I am in the predicament that by instinct I am progressive but theologically I am cautious”. BB’s enjoyment attending the subcommission on chapter IV of De Ecclesia schema [Lumen Gentium] earlier in the year. BB to lecture at Manchester on Good Friday (27 March) on Belief in science, criticism in theology [Belief in the sphere of science, and criticism in religion], with brief summary of the main arguments, citing Lonergan, concluding: “the deposit of faith [sic] has a function in theology analogous to that of sense data in science: as indisputable raw material for thought”. Notes resistance of English bishops to proposed liturgical reforms, doubting their ability to convey or even appreciate themselves the “basic renovation” of “an unchanged traditional Latinism and Westernism”. Reports no progress of “our Bristol University project”, inferring the disapproval of the bishop.

BB to CHB

Notes the realisation of CHB's college project, alongside, in England, the agreement of the local bishop to BB's Bristol University scheme, with some denominational hesitation from Low Church Anglicans. Awaits CHB's thoughts on Theology and the university, particularly Laurence Bright's paper on the curriculum, the fruit of a conference at Downside after Easter in 1963. Hopes Toronto University Press will take CHB's manuscript; and noting BB's hopes for the wholesale reform “if not abolition” of the seminary system, and which might be addressed in Council. Family news. Abbots' Conference next year may be stormy, “since reaction and progress are locked in conflict among us as throughout our Communion”. Council now expected to outlast the year. “For me this [Council] has been a wonderful experience, after feeling myself for nearly thirty years as a sort of odd man out.” Reports his attendance at a subcommission revising the draft of [Dei Verbum], now “improved considerably”; the full Commission on Faith and Morals meets 30 May, with the chapter on Our Lady for [Lumen Gentium] on the agenda. “Our English bishops don't seem yet to have got the hang of the present situation in the Church; I'm afraid there's a lot of discontent among our educated laity.” BB to repeat his talk Belief in science, criticism in theology at Eton, noting reports of the influence among the intelligent boys of a “humanist master” there, and Richard Robinson's An atheist's values, unfamiliar to BB.

Christmas wishes. News from Council: “excellent” speeches of Bishop De Roo; postponement of vote on Religious Liberty beneficial, allowing some improvement of the draft - “[n]othing but a veto from the Pope (which will not occur) could prevent a strong declaration on this subject being passed nest [sic] session”. Two recent papers completed on the topic of the Constitution on the Church [ Lumen Gentium], “on the whole a fine document”: Belonging to the Church (for an unidentified joint-publication); ecumenical possibilities [The Constitution on the Church and Christian Reunion]. Downside Review 83 (April 1965), 103-117. Notes the fortunes of the “progressives” against a “dwindling conservative wing” on the Council. BB appointed to the subcommittee on the Church in the World Today [ Gaudium et Spes, 1.4 The Role of the Church in the Modern World], “on which I have remarkably vague ideas”. Enquires after CHB's negotiations with the University [of Victoria]; and after Valentine Rice, a lay theologian suggested to Bishop De Roo. Family news.

Birthday wishes. Visitation of Worth Priory - “in great form”. Reports outcome of Rome sessions of the subcommission on the Church in the World Today [Gaudium et Spes, 1.4 The Role of the Church in the Modern World]: morality of the married state, and particularly peace and war - “[w]e have avoided condemning outright the deterrent policy, but have emphasised that the interval it provides must be used to search for a more stable basis of peace”. Flies to Switzerland on 29 March, part of a group appointed by the Secretariat to confer with the World Council of Churches on the topic of the Church in Society; the to Rome on 1 April to join the Doctrinal Commission and the Commission on the Lay Apostolate, reviewing the draft schema on the Church in the World Today [Gaudium et Spes]. BB finds inaccuracies in a manuscript of Valentine Rice “somewhat naïve”, and will propose corrections. Reports acceptance of an invitation to deliver the (six) Sarum Lectures at Oxford University in autumn 1966 on The Second Vatican Council: theological aspects; a book to follow. BB’s worries over apparent non-alignment of Pope Paul VI's attitude and intentions with those of “the real mind of the Council”: “provided the Council does its work well, its Acts will be on the statute book, so to speak, to be implemented by some more progressive Pope”. Reports progress with the Bristol University scheme, its vice-chancellor to nominate two members of the Council of the Downside Centre for Religious Studies. Archbishop Ramsey to address a Catholic-Anglican conference in 1965, sponsored by Downside, on Cardinal Newman at Oxford.

CHB attended Faith and Order conference. Prospects for CHB at the World Council of Churches in Geneva; notes controversy over Archbishop Ramsey's stance on Rhodesia. [Valentine] Rice's booklet draws upon material supplied by BB. Reports reaction to BB's one speech this session in Council, on lawful provision for conscientious objection in debate on peace and war. Commends “excellent” speeches of Bishop De Roo. BB's interest in his commissions and subcommittees work, particularly the Doctrinal Commission, noting its luminaries and BB's latitude as “a mad Englishman”. Hopes [Dei Verbum] will be promulgated without alteration on 18 November: “I hope it will strike you as ecumenically helpful. Apart from saying that the limits of the Canon are made known by Tradition, we have firmly avoided any suggestion that Scripture does not in some way contain the whole of revelation”. BB dissatisfied with the document The Church in the World of Today [Gaudium et Spes], the commissions [Doctrinal; Lay Apostolate] having “lacked time to ripen and polish it” - the chapter on peace and war [2.5], while “quite good in intention”, may not engender the right “psychological effect”. Pope Paul VI's speech to the United Nations “splendid”. Revisits and defends The idea of the Church: would “lay more stress on valid baptism as giving permanent sacramental incorporation [sic, recte sacramental incorporation] into the Church”; and that, “since the non-Catholic Christian communions are built on (incomplete) gospel principles and are made up of men of good will, they have, as communions, a positive function in the divine order of things ...”; and treat more positively “the Holy Ghost working in all the Church's members to give her her dynamic aspect (hierarchy giving the static aspect)”. The document [Lumen Gentium] - “one of the masterpieces of this Council”, echoing Dr [E.L.] Mascall's praise. BB's preference for “real theology ... facing present questions” rather than “copying the past”; cites the new journal Concilium. BB to participate in two conferences on the Council: University of Notre Dame in March [1966]; and Toronto in August 1967. Meeting arrangements with CHB. Anticipates the Council concluding on 8 December; notes the promulgation of The Relation of the Church to the Non-Christian Religions [Nostra Aetate], and The Pastoral Function of the Bishops [Christus Dominus] (“may lead to some episcopal tyrannising”); and the likely value of Liberty of Religion [Dignitatis Humanae]. Christmas and New Year wishes. Attends enthronement of George Dwyer Archbishop of Birmingham on 21 December; notes television appearance of BB and Dwyer on the subject of the Second Vatican Council. A paragraph reflecting on the Council is quoted below in full.

“The last session of the Council had its measure of excitements, but the over-all result is very good indeed. The Holy Ghost has certainly spoken to us through the Council; I do hope we shall respond as fully as we ought - though doubtless we shan't. One of the outstanding features is that, almost for the first time since before 325 A.D., an ecumenical council representing the whole Church, has turned decisively away from condemnations (except of hatred, racial discrimination, etc., and of atheism [sic] though not of atheists) and has adopted a positive attitude both to other Christians, to other religions, and to mankind at large. There were of course warnings that we were encouraging indifferentism, muting the Church's message; but in the end charity won the day. It will take some time for this new ferment to spread throughout the People of God.”

Commends Bishop De Roo's contribution. Recommends - “for pure enjoyment” - [Dei Verbum], “the occasion for the first decisive battle of the Council”.

BBB 1/374 15 February 1969
BB to CHB
Acknowledges receipt of Norms of judgement, [a paper by the adult Christian education group on sexual morality], commenting on its findings re extra-marital sex, "unnatural" sexual practices, and "the wider social implications of hetero-sexual acts"; and commending the value of this ecumenical study group evidenced in such a paper. "I so warmly agree with the recommended change of stance ... from juristicive advocacy to pastoral advocacy." Engagements: consecration of the Auxiliary Bishop of Liverpool, today; speaks on The Church and the Future to the Theological Society at Sheffield; addresses Anglican clergy on Roman Catholicism after Vatican II, at Manchester, 18 February. Social Morality Council lobbying re Biafran conflict: "[w]hat will posterity say about the British supply of arms to the N. government and the results in starvation?". Note: annotated in pencil [?by CHB], with references to sections of the text Norms of judgement.

BB to CHB
Birthday wishes. Enquires after CHB’s position under the new Bishop of British Columbia. A projected American tour not now happening, some time is now liberated for writing and reading. Reports further lobbying of the Social Morality Council re the Biafran conflict. Another letter sent to The Times answering a mythologizer of Christianity [Ray Billington, Breaking the barriers of an argument without end, 1 March 1969; page 10; Issue 57498; col. D]. Report of address to one hundred Anglican clergy at Manchester, [18 February]. Reacts unfavourably to an “intransigent” letter from the Vatican Secretariat of State on clerical celibacy: “I hold that, whatever the correct answer might turn out to be, there must be open dialogue on this issue amongst us today. A Moscow-type repression just won’t work - especially as we have no tanks to back it up.”

BB to CHB
Commiserates CHB on not being elected bishop, but welcomes the new Bishop of British Columbia [John Anderson’s] outstanding qualities and ecumenism, as reported by CHB; hopes for good relations with Bishop De Roo. “Someone ought to write a book on the way in which the First Cause operates by allowing Second Causes their full scope. One used to watch this process in Vatican II.” Compares CHB’s comments on Central America with events at Anguilla. BB doubts in accepting an invitation to participate in a conference on Bernard Lonergan in the West Indies [St Leo College, Florida], speaking on the suggested topic, Lonergan’s thought and ecclesiology. Reports a meeting arranged in London on 21 March on Nigeria: Peace or War, sponsored by the UNA[-UK], the British Committee for Peace in Nigeria, the British Humanist Association and the Social Morality Council. BB anticipates, with regret, episcopal anger over a recent Tablet article on collegiality - “that the Church is still being run on pre-Vatican II lines, and that we haven't yet found out how to do better”. Sending [separately] an offprint of BB’s contribution to a festschrift for Bishop André Marie Charue of Namur.

Further comment on Tablet article on collegiality, “in which I suggest that since 400 A.D. Rome has been exploiting her divinely-given prerogatives in a way which does less that [sic; recte than] justice to the episcopal college and/or the local bishops”. Reaction to the death of John Anderson, Bishop of British Columbia. CHB appointed to the General Commission [on Church Union]; BB wary of the danger that such local movements might weaken ties to the wider Anglican communion and risk reinforcing rather than speaking against secular nationalism. Notes suitability of a regional or theological college for CHB; awaits appointment of a new bishop. BB and Henry Chadwick, Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, each to deliver a paper on Authority to ARCIC. BB at Reading for a Christmas holiday. Reports his attendance at a meeting of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith in Rome, noting his “ironical amusement” at his membership; the good sense of Cardinal Franjo Šeper, its new Prefect; and right-wing lobbying in Rome against Vatican II revisions to the liturgy - “rather fun to find the ringht [sic] wing as insubordinate as the left”. BB preached at Trinity [College], Cambridge, at the invitation of Bishop John Robinson, fellow and dean of chapel, and where he met A.C. Bouquet “in great form”. Christmas and new year wishes. Family news. Good report of the International Lonergan Congress; refers CHB to an article written for the Tablet. Defends pragmatism of BB's Uniate Anglican Church proposals: “might serve to concentrate attention on what really matters - the doctrinal and dogmatic issues. There is a danger of irrealism, I think, in ecumenical dialogue, if one never tries to envisage what the shape of things MIGHT be in a united Church.” Advises CHB to consult with Canterbury earlier rather than later re the Canadian [Church union] plans. Not yet read Growing into union, but relays Bishop Graham Leonard's accusation of misrepresentation in a “severe” Church Times review. “I confess I don't see my way very clearly when there is no agreement (doctrinally) about Orders, and no very clear sense of doctrinal authority. In fact, at the human level I should feel despondent; but it seems so clear that the Holy Spirit is in the ecumenical movement, that one goes on in blind trust”. Departs on a South African lecture tour at the end of [?]June, speaking on The Church; wary of political questions. British election “ferment”.

BB's “spiritual-intellectual pilgrimage” with his publisher. Eagerly awaits Bernard Lonergan's new book. Comments on a dissatisfactory [BBC] television broadcast debate with A. J. Family news. Thanks CHB for his comments on the Eyewitness Gazzada paper, which had little apparent impact on discussion there. Locates the essence of ministerial continuity in “expressed intention”, rather than manual contact; suggests, in carrying an undefined point about numerus and laos, the “answer to the (Lutheran?) notion that ministry is nothing more than delegation by the congregation for certain functions”. Welcomes further comments from CHB or his bishop. Bishop De Roo expected at Christian Leaders Conference later in the month. The Gazzada meeting’s moderate success not a surprise given “we are only half way through such a subject as ministry”; plenary session in August 1973; comments on participant Father Jean Tillard, known to CHB, “able and amusing; I wonder a bit whether he is not TOO radical, but I think he is educated enough to be able to defend himself”. CHB disheartened about progress towards Christian unity in Canada. BB identifies conservatism and some real theological and doctrinal differences as the impediments, questions re ordained ministry being fundamental “when one is aiming at full communion or organic unity (whatever the latter phrase means)”. Notes BB’s presence on the Churches Unity Commission, and not expecting obvious progress given “the range of actual or implied ecclesiologies is so enormous”, advocates taking a long view. “The greatest question of all is what you yourself mention: the battle for charity.” Recalling Arnold Toynbee’s comment to BB on the death of Pope John XXIII, BB sees their task as helping foster the desire for unity, which will then come slowly. BBB 1/422  3 May 1983
Family news. Makes extended case against nuclear deterrence, and invites CHB's comments. The following three paragraphs are quoted below in full.

“There is a Christian theological tradition about the ethics of war, dating back to St Augustine. The tradition is not purely pacifist - it acknowledges the possibility of a just war. But it stresses that a just war must be legitimate in its aims and moral in its practice. (I think that both non-pacifism and these prerecited ethical limitations can be based on natural ethics, though they take on a higher horizon for a Christian believer).

Belligerence ceases to be morally acceptable if there is (1) no reasonable hope of victory or (2) a disproportion between the injuries done by war and the good that is aimed at.

I hold that an all-out nuclear war between the super-powers could be immoral, because the extent and quality of the harm inflicted would be out of proportion to the good that would be achieved by victory. There has been powerful medical comment on the inability of doctors to cope with a nuclear holocaust (you may have read an eye-witness recollection of the effects of the atom bomb at Nagasaki - and that bomb was not much more than a toy compared with modern nuclear capabilities).”

The sustained attainment of the explicit goal of the policy of deterrence, the prevention of war, is “impossible to prove”. The following three paragraphs are quoted below in full.

“So the question arises: what do we intend to do if deterrence fails? Our government is not able to assure us convincingly that, in that case, we should not proceed to an all-out nuclear war. And by and large those who invent, manufacture and distribute nuclear weaponry (at the expense of the tax-payers), and those in the armed forces who are being trained for nuclear warfare, have to accept the possibility that they will have been, and will be, co-operating towards a (perhaps conditionally intended) nuclear holocaust.

Away back at Vatican II I made a speech to the R.C. Council pointing out that a conditional intention to do something immoral is itself immoral (even if the intention is not subsequently carried into effect). For example, if a penitent in the confessional confessed to having committed murder; and if, in the course of discussion with him, it emerged that he was intending, if necessary (though perhaps hoping that it would not be necessary) to commit murder again, one could not give him absolution - because he was voluntarily entertaining the prospect of committing murder again.
I don't think that this is abstract reasoning. On the contrary, it is ethical reflection upon the very concrete fact of a policy of nuclear deterrence actualised in manufacture of weapons, training of the armed forces, civil defence policy, etc.”

Thanks CHB for his response on nuclear deterrence. Agrees that the policy of states subsequent to the failure of deterrence may not be determined. Acknowledges receipt of a newspaper article on [limited tactical] nuclear warfare, acknowledges proving the immorality of such (prospective) limited weapons is more difficult, but urges re-attention upon the principles of the current deterrence policy, the unknown intentions of super-power governments to a break-down of deterrence. Notes again Zuckerman’s argument that ongoing weapons development increases the likelihood of deployment. “One would be less hostile, perhaps, to deterrence if our Governments proceeded to ABOLISH their monstrous strategic weaponry, ... what concerns me immediately is the current armaments of our Governments and their failure to make it clear that in no circumstances would they resort to massive civilian destruction.”

Anticipates some friction at the Second Vatican Council, agreeing “there might be difficult local problems; Rome is sometimes more reasonable than a local bishop”. Itinerary to Rome, leaving 3 October, and pausing to celebrate a mass at Genoa. Benedictine Presidents' Synod opens on 5 October; Council on 11 October. “I hope the bishops will really get their teeth into things, and not just accept whatever has been prepared for them.” Family news. BB will take a light typewriter to Rome to “keep some sort of record of the Council”. New high altar at Little Malvern [?Priory], Worcestershire, consecrated by BB, 28 September.

BB at Collegio Sant'Anselmo, Rome, Italy, to MAB
Account of the opening of the Council; BB positioned with a group of abbots. The Pope's address “was good and charitable and, somehow, breathed hope”. First General Congregation curtailed due to a procedural difficulty; comments on slow pace. BB attends meetings of the English bishops at the English College. Difficulty electing commissioners from a body of more than two thousand Council members, unacquainted with each other. Describes the role of the Commissions, anticipating that on Faith and Morals in particular “may well be of crucial importance”. Rome proliferating rumours. Family news. Comments favourably on prayers given in Anglican churches for the Council, and, in particular by [Oliver Tomkins] the Bishop of Bristol, for [Joseph Rudderham] the Bishop of Clifton and BB; “a sort of assurance for me that God will overrule the Council for His own good ends”. Short account of the Vatican City’s relations with the Italian state since the late 19th century. Voting procedures for commissioners; awaits election result. Discussion begins on Monday with the Liturgy: BB submitted amendments, among a number by monastic councillors, “I am keen about … a greater liberty for local experiment and variety - this sounds a bit like the Church of England, I know, but whereas you may suffer from too much licence, we have groaned under too rigid uniformity”. BB’s decision to refuse all social engagements during the Council, declining therefore Douglas Woodruff, editor of the Tablet. Reports the death of a bishop from the USA, noting the high average age of councillors. The Abbot president of the Bavarian Benedictine Congregation “very nice”, a student of the Byzantine church with poor spoken Latin. Meeting with The Times correspondent.

Account of BB's first speech on 26 October, and his surprise to be so invited. Describes the General Congregations and the attendant masses; monastic councillors' preparatory meetings, and submission of amendments. Daily routine, with offices. Family and Chatham Street business news. Describes the constitution of the Collegio Sant'Anselmo, and the role of its Abbot Primate. Summary of balance of opinions in the Council, and outcome, the paragraph quoted in full.

"It seems to me that the real struggle in the Council is between the backward-looking and the forward-looking people. On the whole, the latter are from N. Europe, the former from Italy and Spain. The missionary bishops are also on the whole progressives; America may come to hold the balance - and oddly enough, S. America may turn out to be more progressive than the USA. About medicine etc., the high-ups in Rome do seem to be suspicious of Freud-Jung etc. On medicine otherwise I think they are reasonable, if you allow for the fact that we are radically opposed to the killing of the innocent and of unborn babies."

Account of BB's second speech, 16 November, within the new topic of Fontes Revelationis [Sources of Revelation] [Dogmatic Constitution on Divine Revelation – Dei Verbum], and BB's strong dissatisfaction with the current schema: "intensely interesting" to BB, "the whole Council has brightened up now that we have got off Liturgy and are on to questions of immutable truth". BB to MAB Family news. Reports on Council: Fontes Revelationis [Sources of Revelation] returned to a committee whose composition BB commends. Against apprehension at burgeoning “Protestant liberal” views on the New Testament, suggests a greater latitude for scriptural interpretation may be sanctioned, considering the more authoritative role of the Church itself in teaching the faith; accepts the legitimacy of the Church censoring publication of scholar’s “alarming views”; hopes to “avoid defining about the truth of some modern ways of tackling the NT”, exemplifying formgeschichte (form criticism). “When I became a R.C. over 30 years ago, I had to make an act of almost blind faith that there must be some reconciliation between what the Church basically teaches about Inspiration etc. and the general drift of the best modern scholarship. A great step towards meeting this point was made when the late Pope published his great Encyclical on Scripture [Divino Afflante Spiritu]. But at the moment a die-hard wing in Rome itself is on the war-path.” BB surprised by the strength of the “forward-looking wing” within the Council. Council discussions moved on to the topics of media, and ecumenism (Eastern Churches), the latter BB would prefer as part of a document on the Church. Account of BB’s third speech to the Council, 21 November, on Fontes Revelationis [Sources of Revelation], but subsequent to the Pope’s decision on the document; BB’s English pronunciation of Latin favoured by the English speakers over that of the Latinate speakers. BB withdraws from speaking on the Unity of the Church [Unitatis Redintegratio], making a written submission to the Commission instead, and noting, “I think one must be careful, especially when one is only an abbot, not to speak too often”. Anticipates speaking on Our Lady and/or the Church [Lumen Gentium]. Archbishop Heenan friendly, assuring BB against the chance of the Council defining new dogma. Lunch engagement today, with Sir Peter Scarlett the British [Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary] to the Holy See, other guests included: a Canadian cardinal [McGuigan], [Francis Grimshaw] the Archbishop of Birmingham, [George Dwyer] the Bishop of Leeds, an Irish bishop, two African prelates, Canon Pawley of Ely (Anglican liaison with the Secretariat for [Promoting Christian] Unity.

BB spoke on the Second Vatican Council at Douai Abbey, 20 September. Discounts Roman rumours reported in the Sunday Times of BB’s appointment to succeed Cardinal [Augustin] Bea [to the Presidency of the Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity]; Archbishop Heenan jokes about the same. BB has added MAB to the list to receive his open [news]letters on the Council. BBB 2/10 9 October 1963
Family news. Confirms the death of Fr Richard, “a good and helpful friend for so many years”. Discusses BB's contributions to [Lumen Gentium], [his first speech of the session]: BB defines the Church as the kingdom of Christ, rather than of God, as against his preferred (minority opinion) “that the Church is the people of the Kingdom”; argues that non-Roman Catholic communions be recognised as supernatural societies, “based on gospel”, rather than separate individuals. Aims to speak again, against a too dogmatic definition of episcopal consecration as a sacramental act: “I don't greatly object to the notion ...., but I don't want any new definitions of dogma”. BB also part of a concerted action to revise the document on Our Lady “more scripturally and according to ancient tradition”; spoke on the subject at a hall near St Peter's Basilica to a group of African bishops. BB again meets [Remi Joseph De Roo] the Roman Catholic Bishop of Victoria, known to CHB. Joins twice-weekly with the English bishops' discussions and Commonwealth bishops' receptions at the English College. Gives Irish radio interview, on increased participation of the laity in the life and work of the Church. This Council session calmer than the last, perhaps because “the new Pope is clearly and publicly himself on the progressive side, though with all the precautions and impartiality which his position requires”. “There is a very strong determination to do something to redress the balance between Pope and bishops which, it is thought, the 1870 Council somewhat disturbed. But the way to do it isn't altogether clear (at least to me).”
BBB 2/11  20 October 1963
BB to MAB
Identifies and expands on two crucial issues in the discussions towards [Lumen Gentium]: the sacramental nature of episcopal consecration; collegiality, and a shift in power towards the Curia since 1870, such that hinders active ecumenism. BB suggests the best hope for the adoption of collegiality is that such a college base its authority not merely upon points of legal jurisdiction, invoking instead a “college of love”, “[bishops] are intended by Our Lord to be such”. BB prevented from speaking on episcopal consecration by the closure of that debate. Extra-conciliar activity regarding the document on Our Lady; describes two streams of thought regarding Church teaching on the subject, one incrementalist the other, BB's inclination, revisionist - “to go back to the early patristic tradition and to the Bible to reflect again on the foundations of our theoretical and practical attitude to Our Lady”. Anticipates the great dislike of the “pushers-on” for the “English document” in its current form. Consideration that further development would deter ecumenism. “I want to suggest to the Council that it would be a way of doing very great honour to Our Lady, and of showing our love for her, if we determined to make it not more difficult but easier for our fellow-Christians to understand, sympathize with, and perhaps in the end adopt, our vision of her and our devotion to her.” Canvasses MAB's opinion. Describes the episcopal consecration of the new Apostolic Delegate to England [Igino Eugenio Cardinale]. Commends Pope Paul VI's speech to non-Roman Catholic observers. Family news. BB's concern, despite a progressive majority on the Council, at their lack of progress, and notes the desirability of deciding important issues in Council rather than consigning such matters for subsequent papal consideration: detects the Council wishes to demonstrate “that the bishops have a real role in the government of the Church”.

Anticipates more of a spectator's role in the discussion of Bishops and the Rule of Dioceses, and the likelihood of the bishops being granted greater autonomy of the Vatican. Account of the life and the beatification mass for Blessed Dominic Barberi, sung by Archbishop Heenan, and with a sermon “in Lancashire English”: “[t]he music was so ornate, and so brutal to the words of the Mass, that it confirmed my support of the liturgical revival!” Meeting with Br Max Thurian, an Observer; and Cardinal Döpfner, “warmly sympathetic to the sort of views I want to see prevail”. Notes the positive coverage of the Council in The Times. Family news. Reports an experimental concelebration of bishops and abbots, with the Abbot Primate, at the College - “one of the things allowed for in the new Liturgical reform”. Expanding on comments made at a press conference, BB defines his understanding of Church renewal or aggiornamento; the paragraph is quoted in full.
“At the press conference on Thursday I gave some idea of what I mean by renewal (aggiornamento) in the Church. I said that ever since the second century the Church has been adapting herself to her age. In the second century she Europeanised herself, having started as a Jewish thing. She learnt to think and express herself according to Greek philosophy. Then she Romanised herself, and imperialised herself. (I might have added that, later still, she feudalised herself). She trails along with her remnants of these past adaptations (I might have added, since the Reformation she has frozen herself into the decadent mediaeval attitudes which she took up against the Reformers). For me, renewal means not just a few changes in window-dressing, but a radical return to her origins - not so that we may all become first century Palestinian Jews, but so that we may then translate the fullness of the Gospel into terms relevant to our own age. (The Council can only of course take one or two tentative steps in the required direction; it will be for the Church to explore it further[.])”

Reassures MAB on other speeches on the Bible that she found “awful”, such speakers being “voices in the wilderness”: “I am moderately hopeful that the final text of the De Revelatione will be sensible about Gospel criticism”. Three meetings of the Commission [on Faith and Morals] this week, revising the chapter on Our Lady [in Lumen Gentium]: BB “theologically content” but “practically ... dissatisfied [sic]” at the document's current state, admitting to resisting the Commission's attempts to find a compromise. Expands further on his press conference comments, on “the fullness of the Gospel”: “[m]y idea is that the mediaeval and even great patristic expression of Christianity was narrower than the original deposit of faith, which yet the Church has preserved in her - partly unexpressed - mind”. Notes the election of a Labour Government in the United Kingdom. “The news from Russia may be serious.”

Council voting today on revised text on [Dignitatis Humanae]; the document "says all that is necessary in its short compass"; anticipates its ratification. Doctrinal Commission meeting made three revisions to [Dei verbum]. Offers further view of [Gaudium et spes]: "...will be quite good, but not really ripe ... I don't think it will close doors - except to atheism, divorce, infanticide, indiscriminate warfare, and suchlike. Indeed, on matters like freedom of research and publication (for priests as well as laity) it should be good. It will not be pacifist!" [Optatam totius] "will be worth consideration of other Christian bodies": both this and [Gravissimum educationis] "reasonably modern in [their] outlook." BB's concern regarding the speed and completeness of the implementation of conciliar decisions. "The Roman Catholic people in England have, so far, only a very shadowy and imperfect idea of what it all means - they are preoccupied with little changes in Mass ceremonies etc. To me, the Council is potentially one of the biggest things that has happened in the Church since 1054. MAB Samaritans work. MAB and Felix Butler's approval of BB's Sunday Times interview: BB detects a loss of his personal influence among [British] bishops, weighing this against its positive effect on “some of our worried people”, and its ecumenical value. Regarding Church policy toward priests publicly opposing the Pope, “I personally think that the time comes when one has to decide between public silence and resigning from the cabinet - not from the party”. Notes the release of a statement by Scandinavian bishops echoing that of the Canadian bishops. Reports imminent publication in the Tablet of a series of articles by BB, noting particularly one on conscience [Conscience and authority, Tablet 222, 21 September 1968: pp934-35]. Abbot Wilfrid Passmore leading a retreat with the Ware Carmel, and is to visit BB: “[h]e is a great talker”.

Thanks MAB for her comments on BB's BBC Third Programme broadcast [? The Pope's Encyclical and Its Consequences. 26 January 1969]; noting Monsignor Clark and other conservatives’ dismay at the failure of the papal encyclical Humanae vitae to close the debate, and also its complexity. Notes also, following a meeting of the English Theological Commission on 28 January, the calming effect “theology, and general discussion” is beginning to have on the debate. Reports Cardinal Suenens' appreciation of the historic and ultimately unitive role a dissenting cardinal might play, drawing a parallel with the consequences of the lack of such a voice on vernacular liturgy and two-kind communion at the Reformation. No response yet received to Archbishop Ramsey's letter to the Archbishop of Paris; notes delayed mails. Reading St Francis de Sales Treatise on the love of God, "a Christian masterpiece", but finding its “honeyd [sic] style rather tiresome”. Departs [to Yorkshire] tomorrow to deliver three talks to priests on Collegiality, Authority and Conscience.

Family news. Account of Synod at Chur, Switzerland, recorded in Tablet article [The Significance of the Synod. Tablet 223, 20 September 1969: pp919-20]: heavy press attendance; disrupted by coincident priests' conference; dissatisfaction with result. BB relieved at deferral of Methodist/Anglican [unity], in view of unresolved important doctrinal differences, analogous to the current status of Roman Catholic/Anglican relations: "my own view is that the growing friendship and co-operation between the churches is itself a triumph of grace, and that we must not be too rash in moving on from that to organic union". Meetings: Monsignor Tracy Ellis of the U.S.A., "a distinguished old Church historian with a very modern [sic] outlook", 29 July; Father Scott James, an "old friend ... who much disapproves of my present avant garde views and activities", 30 July; unidentified young rabbi, 1 August, "interested in contacts not only with Christians but with Moslems, [who] feels that religion might conceivably be a reconciling force in the Near East. ... He pointed out that the Talmudic legal system was magnificent as a scheme for an inward-looking persecuted group, but was not adapted for Judaism in a context of genuine toleration". Lunch with Norman St John-Stevas [M.P.] in Hampstead. BB struggling to find Lonergan writings relevant to an ecclesiological subject for a conference paper [in 1970]. Family news. Agrees "the Papacy should become disentangled from excessive Italian and Western influences", noting previous Eastern [European] popes, and citing Hans Küng's analysis of the Reformation. BB in discussion with Dr Geoffrey Fisher about the Structure of the Church, describes Fisher's desire for full communion and complete local autonomy as impractical, but notes "there are strong pressures among us for a greater local freedom of action than has been the custom since, I suppose, the High Middle Ages or before".

Theological Commission meeting at Oscott, 6 October. Attended funeral of a fellow novice at Downside, latterly a parish priest near Slough, then tea with [Wilfrid Passmore] the Abbot of Downside at Reading, 8 October. Delivered two talks to priests at Exeter, 9 October. Engagements: celebrate the golden jubilee of a priest friend of [Father] Martin [Hancock]'s at Canvey Island, 13 October. BB and [Henry] Chadwick, [Dean of Christ Church, Oxford], to prepare a draft paper on The Church and authority, “which I hope will begin with the notion of the Church as a communion in the sense of 1 John”. Commission also considering moral theology, BB identifying three crucial dogmatic issues: infallibilism; Our Lady; Anglican Orders. On the latter point, “it was suggested that modern R.C. ways of understanding the priesthood might undermine the arguments adduced against the CoE Ordinal. Personally, I think that the easy practical way would be to implement the 1920 Lambeth Declaration ... [Regularisation] could be done by conditional ordination, which would involve no concession by Anglicans”. Records two broad points of consensus: a “special relationship” exists; the urgency of union, “for the sake of the Christian mission to the world”. Met Canon Bentley. Notes the belief in transubstantiation “seems to have made great strides in the C. o. E. during the last forty years”. Account of life inside Windsor Castle. Attended funeral at Liverpool; then a conference on religious education at Rugeley. Family arrangements. Engagements: preaches at Evensong at Bournemouth for Colin James, 25 January; addresses Southampton University Christian Societies, 26 January; and the Civil Service Catholic Guild in London, 27 January; two meetings in London, 28 January; meeting of the Theological Commission at Birmingham, 29 January. Commends Cardinal Suenens' bravery, recorded publicly by BB in a Tablet letter (“measured support”). “The Pope was quick to rebuke him in public for this last venture - not quite the last, since Suenens came back to the subject after the Pope’s rebuke, and defended himself.” Plan to meet Robert Runcie, the recently appointed Bishop of St Albans. Account of a course for priests at All Saints, [?London Colney], with commendation of Dick Sutherland and Audrey Andrews' management: good lectures; Question Time panel (Kenneth Woolcombe, Bishop of Oxford; a Methodist; Lord Longford; Patrick O'Donovan; Frank Muir, chairman); Peter Mumford, new Bishop of Hertford, visits; assessment session; short refresher course; to repeat course next year. BB leads a retreat for Dublin diocese priests, 23 June; meets auxiliary bishops [of Dublin], and the "young" Archbishop, [Dermot Ryan]; the archbishop's understanding of ecumenism questioned. "The people I met in Dublin seemed just heart-broken and completely at a loss about Northern Ireland. I didn't notice any bitterness towards the Unionists; just a great wish that some solution could be found that would bring peace and harmony." BB preached at St Edmund's College school mass, today. Visitation at Watford, 30 June. Family news.

Reaction to ill-health of Cardinal Heenan; BB fulfils his engagements in Germany; expects Heenan's resignation. Reports progress on some easier issues at ARCIC meeting [at Grottaferrata] on Authority: "I think one or two of the Anglicans may find it difficult to agree that ... we are dependent on the Church for what we believe about Scripture; and that, if you trust the Church so far, you must surely trust her further"; papal address, and private audience. Report on conference in Germany: "high-powered" guests included an American ambassador, a British diplomat, a Lutheran bishop, a U.S. military officer, "also some clever younger men". Family news. BB consecrated church at Welwyn Garden City, today. Engagements: Holy Year service at Watford, 15 September; departs for U.S.A., 25 September. Regrets appointment of evangelicals to York as well as Canterbury. Archbishop Ramsey's new book reviewed by Heenan, the Cardinal "very kind and appreciative". BB reading second volume of Cardinal Heenan's autobiography: "I very strongly disagree with him in his estimate of religious affairs since the beginning of Vatican II. He does not seem to realise the real problems that theologians are trying to deal with, or why it is important that they should". Ill-health of [Father] Dick Sutherland. School term begun. BB healthy.

BB retreat at All Saints, London Colney, week to 25 July; officiates at ordination, 26 July; parochial visitation, 27 July; Cambridge meeting, 28 July. August set aside to prepare for ARCIC meeting at Oxford, [27 August-5 September]. Comments on the Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity's [recent] statement on ecumenism [Ecumenical Collaboration at the Regional, National and Local Levels]; not a final statement; an advisory; slow progress due to the unfamiliarity of a large proportion of the Roman Catholic Church's members and priests with ecumenism; admits Rome is "going through a somewhat reactionary phase". Re exceptionalist claim of the truth of the Roman Catholic Church: emphasises the Formula of Hormisdas, with its adovwal of the necessity of episcopal communion with Rome, and notes the Formula's neglect by Anglicans; reiterates Vatican II teaching concerning the incorporation of all validly baptised persons into Christ, and thus the Church, and noting, moreover, the Council's acknowledgement that "separated churches" mediate grace. BB compares the task of integrating these aspects into a logical synthesis to that of [quantum] scientists' confronted by the wave-particle paradox. "I think I would add that it is my private view that, if corporate reunion is to occur, it may be necessary at some point to make a jump of decision that outstrips strict logic. I think that the movement to Christian unity is a movement and a growth-process, and it is very difficult to make logical sense of growth, though we all know that it occurs." Visitation at Hatfield, lunching with Lord and Lady Cranborne; then dines with [Robert Runcie,] the Bishop of St Albans and other members of a subcommission of the Anglican/Orthodox Commission [Anglican-Orthodox Joint Doctrinal Discussions], reporting the suggestion of Archbishop Athenagoras that there be tri-partite discussions including the Roman Catholics, 27 July. Re Runcie's opposition to women priests at the General Synod: "I was glad about this, as I had had the impression that he was on the other side".

Notes the Bishop of Ripon John Moorman's imminent retirement; fears his resignation also from ARCIC; BB the eldest member of the Commission. Comments on a paper by Father [Jean] Tillard on papal primacy: "[it] argues - very truly, I think - that the papal primacy can only be seen as an aspect of episcopal government. There is no sacrament to make a bishop into a Pope, so if the papacy were not episcopal it would be a complete anomaly in the Church which seems to be built up on and around the sacraments"; cites his own The Theology of Vatican II. Reading Peter Fleming: a biography; Fleming's travel books were much read by BB's father. In other words we have excluded pure Protestantism and Modernism. Most of us, I think, would also agree that there would be a place for the papacy in a future united Church. But there is still disagreement about the divinely-guaranteed role of such a papacy.” Notes the disquiet of one of the more Protestant Anglican commissioners at the direction of travel. Easter holiday with [Father] Martin [Hancock] at Ilford. Meeting of [English/Welsh] bishops at Westminster, last week: dull, missing “the sparkling if exasperating leadership of Cardinal Heenan”; pleasure at election of George Dwyer, the Archbishop of Birmingham, as chairman, with a summary of his qualities. Welcomes Basil Hume’s being made a cardinal, and thus an English presence at the next papal conclave. BB’s “very great respect and even some affection” for Hume. Assessment of Hume’s qualities: “[h]e is thoughtful. He listens to arguments and doesn't [sic] pretend to consult when he has already made up his mind irrevocably. In the end, he is prepared to take a firm decision. Basically, he seems to be very simple and very spiritual. I think he will be most eager to pursue better relations between your Church and ours”. In light of a three-year experimental period during which auxiliary bishops within Westminster diocese will enjoy more independence and “powers of initiative”, with a view to the creation of new dioceses, BB has offered to step down, disqualifying himself on grounds of age from heading a new diocese. Other roles mooted. Engagements: two confirmations, this week; ecumenical pilgrimage at St Albans Abbey, noting very good relations with the Bishop and Dean, 8 May. Commends C. S. Holiday plans. MAB welcomes the ARCIC statement The Authority of the Church [II]: BB gauges other reactions from the Church Union, the Pope, and the Bishop of Norwich, the latter in The Times [Canterbury and Rome, 24 January 1977; page 13; Issue 59915; col. E]. BB addresses Westminster clergy on the document in March. BB’s thoughts on women priests, in the context of the imminent meeting of Archbishop Coggan and Pope Paul VI in Rome, (the paragraph is quoted in full).

“It would surprise me if the Pope and Dr Coggan met without any mention of the women priests business. I find it difficult to satisfy my mind that there is any definite theological case against women priests. But I should have thought that any sensible person could have seen that the innovation would have such enormous psychological and social effects that one must, at the very least, go extremely slowly about it. And it does seem to me obvious that neither you nor we nor the Orthodox ought, at the present juncture, to go it alone in this matter; since each of us claims to have an ordained ministry that is valid throughout the universal Church, and ecumenism is at a stage when separate decisions must be painfully and tragically divisive. I have some sympathy with your Bishop Marshall, who observed that a Church would look pretty silly if, bowing at the moment to a fashionable craze, it began ordaining women as priests, and then in twenty years found that the craze had died and the respective roles of the two sexes were seen again in the traditional way.”

MAB visit to Cheltenham theatre; BB’s very rare visits to the theatre or cinema. Commends the balanced performances of Shirley Williams and Norman St John-Stevas in a BBC 2 television programme on schooling. BB dissatisfied with his Drawbridge Lecture at St Andrew-by-the-wardrobe, City of London; notes presence of Ivor Bulmer-Thomas. Reviewing for the Tablet: Can we trust the New Testament? by Bishop John Robinson - “[a] very good piece of scholarly popularisation, and on the side of the angels”; The Jesus of Calvary; Jesus in contemporary historical research by Gustaf Aulén - “sets a lot of store by Jeremias and Dodd, as I do”. “It looks as though, at last, scholarship is mvoing [sic] back behind the primitive Church to a real and discoverable Jesus of Nazareth; and the results seem to me to tend towards orthodoxy.” Reports the illness of Canon Parsons, BB’s confessor for ten years.

Draws MAB's attention to an article of BB's in the Tablet prompted by Tom Torrance's Space, time and resurrection: “[t]he book is robustly orthodox ... a good theologian and not too obsequious to modern scholarly radicalis[m]”. Working on The Church and unity, and a chapter on the Church in the New Testament, his interest growing in the historical Jesus and New Testament theology. “If I were an unbeliever, I should find it extraordinary that the Christian movement, so humble in its origins, produced so soon such a wealth of works of literary genius as we have in the NT.” Commends the “depth and splendour” of St John's gospel, setting aside its historical reliability.

“Christologically it is fully orthodox but a bit modern, investigating the human consciousness of our Lord as he advanced in wisdom and stature and in favour with God and man”. Commends Eric Mascall's Theology and the gospel of Christ.
Engagements: lectures on Church and kingdom to recently ordained clergy, at Leicester, 18 January. Effects of bad weather on the school. Attended in-service training course for bishops at Mill Hill, 12 January, commending a talk on urban problems given by David Sheppard, Bishop of Liverpool - “[a] charming and good man”. Begs loan of [Edwyn] Hoskyn's work on the gospel of St John, to inform a chapter in BB's manuscript on the Farewell Discourse(s), “to try and extract from it the notion of the Church as a communion based on our common possession of Thanks MAB for soliciting the prayers of Burnham Abbey for a friend, visited in his last illness by BB. Holiday arrangements: Reading, then Downside Abbey. [The Church and unity] passed by theological censor; BB's new editor at his publisher encountered at an Archbishop's House reception. “I find it difficult to judge the book's merits. It can be criticised from so many different points of view.” Meeting of English/Welsh bishops, last week. Engagements: meeting with a “sympathetic”

Shirley Williams, [Paymaster General], concerning the funding of a Social Morality Council project for moral education, 12 April - “of course it is not easy to squeeze money out of this government, unless you are a Trade Union”. MAB imminently departs for Canadian holiday. Comments on Church Times report of Loughborough Congress, noting participation of an evangelical speaker and the Archbishop of Canterbury, and comparing a “loss of nerve” among Christians unfavourably with General Foch's reaction to imminent disaster at the first battle of the Marne. Intends to write another book “on Christianity itself”, should [The Church and unity] do well.

Acknowledges MAB letter from Victoria, British Columbia. BB's preference for and fifty-years spent in rural surroundings. Reports concerns of John Ainslie, senior editor, concerning [The Church and unity]: "fears that ... the book may seem too dogmatic (but then I wanted to emphasise [sic] that Christianity is not just a subjective idea but the apprehension of supreme objective reality). And he seems to think that I have not done justice to the non-Roman-Catholic Christian bodies". Suspects U.S. reception of the text is the cause of these concerns. Draws MAB's attention to letter in The Times, and subsequent correspondence, [Unity warning by Roman Catholic bishop, 10 May 1978; page 18; Issue 60297; col. B]. Notes also, citing the Tablet, Bishop John Moorman's shared appreciation of a crossroads having been reached by the Church of England: "is it going to veer towards Protestantism, or will it prefer to maintain what it inherits from historical Catholicism?". Comments on the treatment of "the Covenant matter" at [Loughborough] Synod: "I think the amendments are in the right direction, and I am relieved that they were passed. They leave it open to the Church of England to maintain that it insists on the historical episcopate and that its doctrine is in agreement with the ARCIC's Statement on Ministry and Ordination [The doctrine of the ministry]. I am very pleased about them, and I hope that what they stand for will not be traded away in subsequent negotiations towards covenanting. (But I fear that, indirectly, the Resolutions will have committed the CofE to some sort of recognition of women priests)." Reading, and for review in Christian World, Karl Rahner's Foundation of Christian Faith - "a masterpiece"; Sermon on St Thomas More. Welcomes the “original” appointment of Pope John Paul II, noting media interest, his inevitable international role, his nationality, and his suitability considering his familiarity “with Communist strategy and tactics”, state communism being “one of the major world issues”. Remembers the Pope as a very young listener on the Second Vatican Council [sub]commission on The Church in the World Today [Gaudium et Spes, 1.4 The Role of the Church in the Modern World]; anxiety at Cardinal Hume’s report of his conservatism. Also concerned that the Pope is not informed about or disapproves of the contemporary “immense theological development”; but welcomes his interest in theology and philosophy. Encloses sponsorship cheque for a Samaritans fundraising walk. Family news. Regrets the defeat of Viktor Korchnoi at the World Chess Championship, noting distracting external factors; wishes for Karpov-Fischer match, “provided they would behave themselves”. Delivered talk to Roman Catholic undergraduate society at Oxford [University], 22 October. Engagements: addresses Dominican theology students on Vatican II's teaching on the Church, [at Oxford University], 3 November; substitutes for Cardinal Hume at Wesley's Chapel, London, 1 November, reminding MAB of their “DEEP disapproval” of the Oxford Road Methodist chapel in Reading when they were young.

We haven't been as clear as I should have wished about the sacrifice of the Mass, but the evangelical member had a great blockage about this - fear of repeated immolation seems to have overflowed for him into fear of continued offering.” Engagements: meeting of Westminster diocese bishops, 22-23 January.

Visit of an unidentified Roman Catholic priest, leading a Christian mission to the Ummah, from Fribourg, Switzerland, today. Engagements: Norway [lecture tour], 20 August; Venice ARCIC meeting, [28 August-6 September]. Notes sorrowfully Graham Leonard the Bishop of Truro’s advocacy of the Church of England covenanting, with recognition of ministries, with the free churches, and with regard to women priests; argues any recognition of women priests should be deferred until the Roman Catholic and Orthodox Churches are also ready to do so. Negotiation with editor of the Clergy Review, to withdraw a paragraph in an unidentified article suggesting “that the non-Christian Jewish people is still in the old covenantal relationship with God. ... St Paul would be horrified!”. Highly commends Hamilton's The people of God: “a masterpiece ... One of the finest conspectuses I know of the whole salvation history”. Family news. Attended Westminster diocese bishops meeting, 20 September. Felicitates MAB on a friendship: “I think a lasting friendship is one of the greatest of earthly blessings”. Delight at the appointment of Dr Robert Runcie as Archbishop of Canterbury: uncertainty over Runcie’s “radical” Catholicism; “he has a very open mind; but his convictions seem to me to be firm. ... I think he has a very difficult task ahead, partly owing to the irresponsible steps taken about ordaining women in USA etc.”; welcomes his knowledge of the Eastern Orthodox Church vis-à-vis ecumenism, exemplifying issue of women priests. Report on Venice ARCIC meeting, [28 August-6 September]: arguments with fellow Roman Catholic attendees; “[w]e have not reached full agreement over the role of the Pope. One or two of the Anglicans would apparently see their way to admitting nearly all that we RC’s hold (as of faith) about the Pope - if and when full Christian reunion occurred. But of course it never will occur. Broadly speaking, ever since the first Epistle of St John was written, there always has been schism”; intention of ARCIC I to conclude next year, and then report to Rome and Canterbury; expectation of the appointment of a new commission with fresh instructions [ARCIC II]: suggests Pope John Paul II unfamiliar with “issues that are special to the Anglican/RC dialogue”. Engagements: jubilee celebrations at Downside Abbey of BB's intake to the novitiate, five attendees including [Aelred Sillem] the Abbot of Quarr (“a very holy man”), 28 September; ordains two monks as deacons; opens/blesses a comprehensive school at Bath; returns to St Edmund's College, 30 September. Personally, I think that the late Pope and the present one have got it wrong and that in consequence much harm has been done and is being done. To put my view shortly! it is easy to say Thou shalt not kill but Christianity has interpreted that as meaning: Thou shalt not murder, and then proceeded to distinguish murder from justifiable homicide. Similarly, it is easy to say Thou shalt not interfere with the natural process of conception, but we need to interpret that as meaning: Thou shalt not abuse sexual intercourse for the purpose of irresponsible pleasure-seeking - and that would leave room for the responsible use of contraception.” Publishers Collins likely to accept an improved version of BB's An approach to Christianity. BB preparing briefing notes for Cardinal Hume for the Synod of Bishops, On the role of the family: “I want the Cardinal (and I hope many others) to speak out plainly on this subject [birth control]. Almost the only strong argument in favour of our present stance is that the Church has been traditionally against contraception; and I have been anxious to help Hume to sustain the opinion that this does not settle the matter for ever and ever. I remember that Bishop Gore was said to have retired because he could not stomach the policy being adopted by your bishops on the subject almost half a century ago.” Reviewing Eric Mascall's forthcoming work [ Whatever Happened to the Human Mind?] : “very good indeed, and quite a counter-blast to the Myth of the incarnation school of thought. he [sic] attacks - devastatingly - the position of Dr Lampe (who of course has unfortunately died before the book's publication)”. Further to Macquarrie's definition of revelation being activated by its reception, and thus Christianity having begun at the moment a disciple first identified Jesus as the Christ, BB has written to him to suggest, "that one might rather say that revelation began when Jesus, as man, first recognised that God is his Father (in prayer: Abba)". Concerning the Synod of Bishops in Rome, On the role of the family, "[w]e are all a bit on tenterhooks ... I hope the Pope will really listen, not just hear, what men like Hume will, I hope, be saying". Engagements: BBC talk on Man without God; and a BBC interview "on being old", 1 October. Family news. "I don't remember what I expected when ARCIC began its work all those years ago. But I do remember my delight when we reached agreement on our Eucharist Statement. It will take some time for the Final Report to be digested far and wide. Meanwhile, I see that the Bishop of Norwich, in a letter in today's Times takes a poor view of the prospect for full organic communion. Hopes the “forward-looking but orthodox” views of BB and Cardinal König, and their online publication, might support and foster work by other critics of the slow implementation of the teachings of Vatican II.
