The Cartuarium Vetus and related material

The Cartuarium Vetus, described in the rubric at the head of the text (now f.125r) as “liber Cartarum Privilegiorum Indulgentiarum confirmationum & transactionum Ecclesie Dunelmensis”, and largely compiled between about 1220 and about 1230, has a complicated history. It was apparently first conceived as twelve quires, each of ten leaves (ff 125-149, 154-158, 11-38, 41-89, 94-116: see quire-numbers and original catchwords); the original compilation was not complete before 1220, for it includes documents dated in that year (f 37v, a bull of Pope Honorius III, and f 158r, copy of 2.1.Archiep.15.). A list of contents was then drawn up on another quire of ten leaves (ff 1-10). The bifolium of Lytham charters (ff 170-171), copied in the original hand and intended for insertion between Quires VIII and IX (f.62 & 63), was probably compiled after the list of contents, for there was only space for a summary entry instead of a list of items (f 4r). Four other documents in the original hand have entries added in the list of contents: one, falling in the middle of a section, can hardly be an addition (ff 136v-137v, 1r), but the last two charters in the Haliwarfolc section (ff 89r-v, 5v) and the last in the Northumbria section (ff 99v, 6r) probably were added, since there are blue initials in both cases where red should occur according to the original scheme of alternating colours for initials. One further instance of this discrepancy has been noticed: in the initials of two documents dated 1225 that were added in a variant of the original hand at the end of the Archbishops section (f 158v) and in fact continued on to the first of the four extra leaves which were removed before the fifteenth-century foliation was added (Durham Cathedral MS B.IV.26. ff 64-67); entries for the two documents were added to the list of contents (f.2r). The clause from a forged episcopal charter copied in the margin beside the version of the forgery in the original compilation (f 127r) was probably added at an early stage, for the hand is very similar to that of the two entries added in the list of contents already mentioned (f 5v), although the rubric for the clause is an addition.

The original scheme of decoration extended, at least in part, to the various additions mentioned. The red quire-numbers made no allowance for the bifolium of Lytham charters (ff 170-171), and “viii”, the number of the quire it was to follow, appears in crayon at the foot of the verso of the second leaf. A red running-title is only found over one addition (f 158v), where it was perhaps added. On the other hand the alternating red and blue initials and the rubrics are indistinguishable in the bifolium of Lytham charters from those in the original compilation, but slight differences of colour and the lack of red initials where appropriate suggest that the other added items were taken into the original scheme after its completion (ff 89r-v, 99v, 158v), likewise the corresponding entries in the list of contents (ff 5v, 6r, 2r). In contrast these additions, with their entries in the list of contents, all appear to have been given their red numbers at the same time as the items in the original compilation; the Lytham charters, not being itemized in the list of contents, had no numbers. Thus it seems that the original decoration was in hand before the original compilation was augmented in any way, but that it continued and was extended until after the two documents of 1225 were copied (f 158v).

One problem remains. In an additional quire of eight leaves (ff 159-166) four bulls that follow copies of the 1225 re-issues of Magna Carta and the Charter of the Forest are written in the original hand and have rubrics indistinguishable from those in the original compilation; presumably these rubrics were added, although none were provided for the two re-issues. These re-issues have coloured initials (ff 159r & 162v) flourished in a more sophisticated style than those of the original compilation; in this they resemble the initials of another additional quire of eight leaves (ff 117-124) which contains copies of transactions and has quite distinct rubrics, although "transactions" are mentioned in the rubric at the head of the original text (f 125r). Both the re-issues and the transactions are written in a variant of the original hand; they have no entries in the list of contents, and their original position cannot be established. A variant of the original hand also occurs in the copy of the agreement made in 1229 between the Bishop and the Convent of Durham, known as the Convenit (ff 149r-152r); two extra bifolia were provided in the middle of Quire II, at the end of the Bishops section, to accommodate this. Besides the hand the anomalous size of the quire, the lack of initial, rubric, running-title or number, and the slightly different size of the writing-frame on the later leaves confirm that the "Convenit" was not part of the original compilation, but was added. This is crucial, for it is unlikely that the addition of so important a document was long delayed after its execution in 1229, and so it is reasonable to conclude that the original compilation, incomplete in 1220, had been completed by about 1230.

The addition of material at the ends of the various sections of the Cartulary has already been mentioned; there was a good deal of space for this and the process continued steadily during the rest of the thirteenth century. Some additions were of a similar nature to the existing material, earliest perhaps the three charters concerning Yearhaugh at the end of the Transactions section (ff 122v-123r), for they precede a charter added in a variant of the original hand (f 123r); contemporary hands copied two other charters (ff 145v & 171v). Two documents concerning the release of the monks from excommunication (f 123v) were copied in the same hand as a grant issued between 1234 and 1244 by the Convent (f 90r), which is the first item in a quire of four leaves now found inserted between the Haliwarfolc and Northumbria sections (ff 90-93); this extra quire includes grants in favour of the monks in various hands (ff 90v-91r, 91v, 91v-92r, 92r, 92v & 93v), one of which copied other grants of similar date by the Convent, one at this point (f 91v), another appropriately found at the end of the Northumbria section (f 100r), and perhaps a third at the end of the Scottish section (f 116v). The mid-thirteenth century also saw the addition of material of a rather different kind, in the form of a list of pensions due from the Prior's Chamber (f 166v); this was drawn up in about the 1240's, with alterations and amendments made a little later (Mag William of Manfield, erased, occurs in 1248 (2.1.Pont.12), Reginald de Ponte Curvo in 1241 x 1249 (2.3.Spec.65.), and Thomas of Windsor in 1247 (2.1.Pont.17.); William of Middleton, added, was sheriff of Northumberland in 1257 (1.2.Reg.13.). These amendments were mostly embodied in a similar list (f 175v), which was itself succeeded by a third list to be found elsewhere and dated c.1265 x c.1272 (DAD p 87); the second list was entered beneath a break-down of the Convent's income from lands and churches which seems to be the oldest item on two extra bifolia (ff 167, 168, 174 & 175) now forming the outer leaves of the complex quire centred on the earlier bifolium of Lytham charters (ff 170-171), but this dating is a matter of palaeographic judgement, and may well be mistaken, as it is easier to suppose that these leaves were provided for the copies of episcopal charters made on half of both bifolia in or after 1252 (ff 167-168). Although entries were added to the list of contents (f 1v) for the Convenit, followed by the episcopal charters in question and finishing with a further episcopal charter, dated 1254, (3.2.Pont.5) of which there is now no copy in the Cartulary, the original location of the extra leaves is not clear: their insertion immediately after the Convenit at the end of the Bishops section would have meant putting them where sufficient blank space already existed to accommodate the copies and between leaves viii and ix, or ix and x, of a fourteen-leaf quire, and in any case there is no gap for them in the fifteenth-century foliation at this point. It is quite possible that the two bifolia formed a separate quire, or perhaps they centred on a third added bifolium (ff 172-173); the last episcopal charter (f 168v) would then have been followed by an item apparently in the same hand (f 172r), albeit concerned with the Prior of Durham's feudal dues in Scotland. Another physical addition was a slip (f 20*) now bound in, but to judge by the sewing-holes (f 20) originally a schedule; why this archiepiscopal charter of 1259 should have been placed in the middle of the papal bulls is mysterious. Nor is it easy to explain the selection of the blank leaf (f 124v) used for copies of three mid-thirteenth century summonses to parliaments, a letter concerning the Convenit, etc.

Additions continued during the late thirteenth century, but without any physical enlargement of the Cartulary; in the choice of space for the additions little regard was paid to the existing arrangement of the contents. As before there were grants bearing on the Convent's position (ff 9v, 37v-38r, 123r, 104v-105r, 135v, 172r-v) including two copies of king John's charter for the knights and free tenants of Haliwarfolk (ff 63r & 152r), but the proportion of other material was greater. As well as a grant at fee-farm, and an undertaking by the Convent in response to a grant (f 172v), there were copies of two corrodies and a note of a third (ff 10v, 175r), a memorandum of a pension first due in 1275, written in a hand found copying a document of 1275 (ff 174v; 10v & 125r), and a list of pensions, probably from about the 1280's (f 174v: Mag Reginald of Brandon occurs in 1283 (4.1.Archiep.3), Mag Adam of Filby died in 1287 (3.12.Pont.7.)), together with some obscure notes on other financial matters (ff 10v, 173r-v, 175r). Four items concern the bishop and the Convent's relationship with him during the 1270's (ff 10v, 174r-v, 174v). Material added at the turn of the century ranged from a second copy of the 1225 Charter of the Forest on an extra bifolium (ff 39r-40r), a grant of a rent (ff 92v-93r), two late thirteenth-century inquests on the fishery of Pool in the Tweed (f 124r), the prior's appointment of proctors for the bishop's court on a schedule (f 118v^{sch}), to part of Bishop Bek's petition after the seizure of his liberty in 1293, on a slip now bound in (f 116*).

The fourteenth century saw a lull in additions to the Cartulary, but some effort was made to find appropriate places for those that were made. During the earlier part of the century one of the forged charters of William I was copied on a blank at the beginning of the Kings section (f 40v); a grant by the bishop clarifying the Convenit for the monks in the matter of courts was added in the first available space after the Convenit (ff 152v-153r), while an extract from the Valuation of Norwich is found on a separate leaf now bound in (f 176), and a memorandum concerning the taxation of the prior's churches in Scotland on a slip now sewn on as a schedule (f 168v^{sch}). In the latter part of the century further items concerning the prior's court were added, all in one hand; one filled the space following the grant already copied after the Convenit (f 153r-v) and the other occupied a blank leaf elsewhere (f 55r-v). A note of the way in which the prior's rights over tenants in his borough should be defended was added in the margin beside the relevant part of the Convenit (f 151r), and a copy of an inquest taken in 1362 on land in Scotland is found on an otherwise blank bifolium (f 169r) which, with its return leaf cut away, now forms part of the composite quire at the end of the Cartulary.

The fifteenth century was marked by renewed activity; this was largely archival in nature and much of it was directed towards the papal bulls. One hand added a bull of Gregory IX at the end of the Popes section (f 38r), a charter of King John (f 56r) and a note of witnesses and date (f 54v); similar hands supplied witness-lists (ff 52v, 53r), dates (ff 28v, 26v, 31r, 33v), and a second charter of King John (f 54v). Another hand added a series of dates (ff 28r, 28v, 31r, 33v, 34r, 34v, 35r), and perhaps the opening of a bull (f 62v); one or two more provided witness-lists (ff 64v, 65r) and a note of an archbishop's dates (f 157r), a cross-reference (f 158v), omissions (ff 152r, 165v, 166r) and a bull confirming another already in the text (ff 165v-166r). elsewhere an omission in the original compilation was rectified (f 155r). Almost all these additions were made in the margins around the appropriate items. A summary of evidence concerning the wood at Hemingbrough was fitted into a space (f 40r) near the royal charter for Hemingbrough, where a cross-reference was provided (f 42r). Various extracts relating to tithes were made on a slip, now bound in (between ff 33 & 34 and 37 & 38). It was also apparently during the fifteenth century that the Cartulary was partially foliated, while the original arrangement still obtained (ff 125-158, 11-60); why the foliation was not completed is unclear, but it was soon superseded.

The fifteenth century foliation serves to show that the quires originally numbered I-VIII were in that order then, with the added bifolium in Quire VI in its present place in the quire (ff 39 & 40). It is difficult to believe that the Cartulary was not bound at this stage, and there is a little evidence to confirm this view: the damage to the fore-edges of the added bifolium mentioned (ff 39 & 40) and the discoloration of the fore-edge of the first leaf of two added bifolia (ff 90-93) may have happened because these leaves stood proud, the binding preventing them being pushed further in. As the first copies on these two extra bifolia seem to have been made in the mid-thirteenth century, this suggests that the binding of the Cartulary took place shortly after its completion. This may have been done even before the Convenit was added in about 1230, as the edges of the extra leaves required for the latter part of this (ff 150-153) show signs of damage not wholly explicable on their present alignment; on the other hand the bifolium of Lytham charters (ff 170-171) added earlier appears to have been marked "viii" to show that it was to be bound in after Quire VIII. Where the extra quires containing Transactions and the 1225 re-issues of Magna Carta and the Charter of the Forest (ff 117-124, 159-166) belonged in the original binding is not at all clear, if indeed they were included, and it remains an open question how most of the other added leaves were handled (ff 37*, 116*, 167-169, 172-176).

The original binding was replaced in the late Middle Ages; the catchword at the end of quire I (f 134v) was probably associated with this rebinding. This was presumably the occasion of the re-arrangement of the contents, for it would hardly have been done later; the aim of this seems to have been to harmonize the Cartulary with the existing arrangement of the original documents involved, but it fell far short because the order could only be disturbed where the end of one of the sections co-incided with the end of a quire, and there was only one instance of this, at the end of Quire III. It is likely, however, that this rebinding also afforded an opportunity for various added leaves to be gathered up with the bifolium of Lytham charters (ff 170-171) to form the last quire of the Cartulary, although it is just possible that this should be associated with the present binding. For this third binding letters were placed at the foot of the first leaf of each quire, and the parchment fly-leaf at the front of the Cartulary was stuck down on a paper leaf; it is to be dated before 11 October 1824, since parts of the inscription certifying the production of the Cartulary in the Exchequer on that day pass through holes in the parchment fly-leaf on to the paper beneath (f ivr).

The raison d'être of the Cartuarium Vetus has been touched upon in considering the fragments of the more grandiose cartulary compiled at about the same time (Misc. Ch. 7177 & Oxford, Bodleian Library MS Carte 177 ff 41 & 42). An answer to the problem raised by the production of two cartularies was suggested in terms of parallel functions in different parts of the Cathedral Priory: finding evidence for connecting the Cartuarium Vetus with the prior, it seems reasonable to connect the larger cartulary with the terrar, the monk responsible for administering the Convent's estates. Whether the Cartuarium Vetus was intended for the Prior's Chamber is another question; although the choice of material for the original compilation was not obviously made with this end in view, it would be difficult to argue that the material chosen speaks against such a purpose. The evidence of additions made during the thirteenth century is much clearer: there are the lists of pensions due from the Prior's Chamber drawn up in the mid-thirteenth century (ff 166v & 175v), the memorandum of a pension from the Prior's Exchequer and first due in 1275 as by the Prior's, not the Convent's, seal, and a list of payments "de Camera nostra" dating from about the 1280's (f 174v), while the mid-thirteenth century summonses to parliaments were directed to the prior (f 124v) and a thirteenth-century definition (f 172r) and a fourteenth-century inquest (f 169r) both concerned the prior's feudal dues in Scotland. It seems safe to conclude that the Cartuarium Vetus had found its way into the Prior's Chamber almost as soon as it was compiled, if not before.

It is more difficult to suggest when it found its present place with the main body of the monastery's records; this may not have happened until after the Dissolution. Although consultation of the convent's archive was presumably demanded by the supplying of omissions and perhaps the re-ordering of the contents that took place during the fifteenth century, it is difficult to see any good reason for taking the Cartuarium Vetus into that archive at that stage, as a new set of cartularies (Carts I, II & III) had just been compiled, and it certainly does not appear among the books to be found in the Chancery in 1421 (Reg II f 156v: Catalogi Veteres etc (SS 7) pp 123-124)

Once in Durham Cathedral Archive, the Cartuarium Vetus was apparently little disturbed; it was rebound and was once produced as evidence. Historians who used it in the earlier nineteenth century described it as the "Cartuar' parvum" (SD III p 392, RND No III); later the Rev William Greenwell, who did a great deal of work listing the muniments, used the term "Cartuarium Vetus" (FPD p lxxiii), and, although it is not established that it was known as such during the middle ages, this is the current reference, not "Parv. Cart." or "Small Cartulary" (HduP No 5, cf p 316; GRC Davis: Medieval Cartularies of Great Britain (1958) p 39 No 326).

Accession details

Placed in the University's care by the Dean and Chapter of Durham in 1948.

Arrangement

The numbering system reflects the medieval organisation of the documents in boxes with four compartments: the first number is the compartment, the second the box, and the final one the number in the sequence (thus 3.2.Archiep.5 is the fifth document in the third compartment of the second box. The numbers were assigned in the Repertorium Magnum. The documents are written on parchment unless otherwise stated.

Copyright and copying

Permission to make any published use of material from the collection must be sought in advance from Durham Cathedral Library (library@durhamcathedral.co.uk). The Library will assist where possible with identifying copyright owners, but responsibility for ensuring copyright clearance rests with the user of the material.

Form of citation

The form of citation should be GB-0033-DCD-Cart.vet, or the collection title Durham Cathedral Archive: Early cartularies, and the reference number.

To order items in the searchroom, use the collection reference code(s), derived by removing the repository code (GB-0033-), followed by the reference number. Citing the section of the finding aid is useful.

Descriptive methods

The detailed description of the contents consists mainly of a guide to the originals from which the items were copies, or, where the word "as" is used, to better copies of them; the references are underlined and refer to the Archive unless otherwise stated. Only items for which no original or better copy has been found are calendared, but, although witness-lists are commonly omitted, such an omission has not been taken as grounds for preferring a later copy with the witness-list, nor is the omission noted; if possible, the calendar includes the reference under which the document was listed in the catalogues of the existing classes. Since items forming part of the original compilation are to be dated before about 1230, the entries for all added items are bracketed:- { }, followed by a note of the period at which the addition was made. As a convenient means of identification, printed copies of documents are cited, and the following abbreviations have been used for printed sources cited more than once:-

History

Biographical information: These leaves, together with Oxford, Bodleian Library MS Carte 177 ff 41 & 42, appear to constitute the only surviving fragments of a large early thirteenth century cartulary containing copies of the Priory of Durham's main deeds. The earliest date for its compilation is established by the copies of 2.2.Pont.1. and 2.2.Pont.5. (ff 19v-20r), both dated 22 September 1218, and, on palaeographic grounds, it is likely that it was not drawn up long after that, making it about contemporary with the Cartuarium Vetus.

Its relationship with that smaller cartulary is obscure. Although it is only on MS Carte 177 f 41r-v and Cart Vet ff.63v-64r that the contents of the two cartularies run in parallel, there is a shred of evidence that the Cartuarium Vetus may have been the source of the copies in the larger book: where Cart Vet f 146f gives an absurd date in the notification as simply "Millesimi", Misc.Ch. 7177 f 18v appears to have had two words, "millesimi ...im", then altered, presumably by recourse to the original, by erasing all but four minims and inserting in front of them "CC"; in other words, the copyist of the larger cartulary may have been using the Cartuarium Vetus and trying to make sense of that, rather than working from the originals. Equally, however, the copyist of the Cartuarium Vetus may have been using the larger cartulary, and simply omitted a word that made nonsense.

Even if the textual relationship of the two cartularies were established, there remains the question posed by the production of them both. Given that they were compiled in about the 1220's, it is difficult to see that one was intended to supersede the other, and the marginal notes in both certainly show that neither was discarded. It seems more likely that the two cartularies were conceived as being complementary, and, since neither appears appropriate to one of the cells, both presumably belonged in the monastery itself. One possible context is that the Cartuarium Vetus was made as a working book, while the much larger and more handsome cartulary served as a ceremonial book; if that was the intention, it had been abandoned before the end of the thirteenth century with the addition of cross-references to the numbers of the copies in the Cartuarium Vetus in the margin of MS Carte 177 f 42. Another possibility is that both were working books, for different parts of the monastery. This seems plausible: a significant proportion of the additions to the Cartuarium Vetus were of particular concern to the Prior, suggesting that this volume may have belonged in his Chamber. The larger cartulary may then have answered the needs of the Terrar, the monk responsible for the administration of the Convent's estates, later finding its way into the monastic Chancellor's office, and so perhaps into the list of books there drawn up in 1421, as "D Quartum cartuarium antiquum de dunimentis generalibus quod vocabatur liber terrarii", a volume that has not been traced (Reg II f 156v: Catalogi Veteres etc (SS 7) p 123).

The subsequent history of the larger cartulary is not at all clear. Marginal annotation (e.g. f 34) shows that it continued in use until the early fifteenth century, when it was presumably superseded by the new set of cartularies (Carts I, 11 and III) that were compiled at the time. The later foliation shows, however, that some time elapsed before it was completely broken up, but once this did happen the leaves were dispersed, none remaining among the Cathedral Archive. The leaves now forming Misc. Ch. 7177 appear to have come into the hands of the Sharp family, although the note on the paper wrapper attributed to Granville Sharp does not seem to be in the same hand as extant letters of his; from the Sharps the leaves probably descended to the Lloyd-Bakers and 1946 saw their restoration to the Cathedral by Olive Lloyd-Baker. Presumably the two leaves now in MS Carte 177 were wrappers or fly-leaves to the Tabula of the Convent's deeds that forms the bulk of that manuscript, but how or why this was acquired by the eighteenth century collector, John Carte, is not known; it was from him that it came to the Bodleian Library.
